THE UNION LEAGUE.

GREAT POPULAR DEMONSTRATION.

The Loyal Men and Women of New-York Enthusiastic for the Union Cause.

Speeches of Gen. Wool, Gen. Cochrane, James T. Brady, Esq., and Ex-Gov. Wright.

Address of Hon. Andrew Johnson, of Tennessee.

A Plea for the Southern Unionists—An Expose of Compromisers and Traitors.

In compliance with the call issued by certain of our citizens, who desired to inaugurate a Loyal League, which should, in its membership, devote its influence and its power to the suppression of treason, and the perpetuation of the Union, an immense audience assembled at the Academy of Music last night. Tickets of admission, with Union badges, had been furnished to every loyal man or woman who desired them, and we learn that the demand was such that twenty buildings like the Academy would not have sufficed to accommodate them. Thousands of people had gathered about the doors of the Academy long before the doors were opened, and at the appointed hour they rushed in, filling every seat in the parquet and the various circles in less time than they were ever filled before.

The scene presented from the platform was most exhilaratingly magnificent. The boxes were occupied by ladies, as was a great part of the parquet, but the circles exhibited dense masses of men—interested, cheering and enthusiastic men. On the platform were a great number of prominent citizens, among whom were:

Secretary S. P. Chase,	Secretary Gideon Welles,
Dr. Lieber,	Gen. Wool,
Gen. Cochrane,	Gen. Wool's Staff,
Rev. Dr. Tyng,	Rev. Dr. Hitchcock,
Gen. Potter,	Dr. Nitch,
Mayor Opdyke,	D. D. Field,
James T. Brady,	Jonathan Sturgis,
Peter Cooper,	P. M. Wetmore,
Cyrus W. Field,	R. T. Hudgett, &c., &c.

The house having become absolutely filled at 7 o'clock, a kind of

was organized by Mr. Wetmore, who said:

GEN. WETMORE'S SPEECH.

It is not time to commence the meeting, but there is always a little previous business to be attended to. In the first place, I want to try the gauge of the house to see how a very inferior voice sounds; and then I want to get a look at a good loyal audience like this. [Applause.] I tell you, ladies and gentlemen, it is a rare sight, and a noble sight, to see so many loyal men and women under the roof of one building. I do not believe, I am sure I heartily trust, that there is not a soul in this building that does not belong to a loyal body. [Applause.] All of you have your hearts fixed upon the progress of this war. You know how many noble regiments New-York has sent to the field, nearly 200,000 men. (Shaking the platform, behind me here, an officer who led from this State, eighteen months ago, the noble regiment called the First Chasseurs. He left here a Colonel, but has won his star as a Brigadier by his own conduct on the field—Gen. COCHRANE. [Applause.] Don't he look as if he was all right? ["Yes."]

Gen. COCHRANE was received with hearty applause, after which he spoke as follows:

GEN. COCHRANE'S SPEECH.

I did not suppose, fellow-citizens, whether a look at me is satisfactory, but I am sure that a look at you is satisfactory to me. [Applause.] When I left the army at the front, I did not expect to witness and greet such a fire in the rear. [Applause.] Peace has its armies, as war has its armies; but the magnetic relation existing between the army of citizens and the army of soldiers in this war is an influence which will carry this country forward to its victories and its success. [Applause.] I am introduced, I presume, fellow-citizens, merely as a premonitory symptom, this evening. [Laughter.] I wish that I could give you some earnest of that which is in store for you—of a diction that will thrill your blood, of a presence that will elevate your hearts, of a presence imported from fields of battle, where desolation has reared its horrid crest to display to you here the image of war; show to you the prospects of our approaching triumph, and teach to you that, in the distance, whether immediate or far-removed, victory and triumph and success are to crown our efforts. [Cheers.] It is for the great City of New-York to pronounce its judgment upon the state of the country, and when that City speaks, its echoes reverberate through the whole land, and they find a home in the very core of the heart of yonder army, now awaiting the signal for advance. [Applause.] I am not to make a speech to you; I have seen where action was paramount. Let action prevail here, following immediately upon the language which I hope to be uttered this evening, and there can be no question what the result shall be. I thank you for the attention you have shown to me. I greet you well for the common cause in which we are all engaged, and respectfully and courteously make my bow. [Cheers.]

Mr. CHAS. GOULD then introduced Maj. Gen. WOOL, courteously complimenting the veteran soldier upon the services he has rendered his country, since his earliest entrance to the army, to his activity during the war of 1812 and elsewhere. The General was received with three hearty cheers, which were again and again renewed, after which he said:

GEN. WOOL'S SPEECH.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN: I appreciate this reception, not on my own account, but, I believe, it is sure for my country at the present time than for myself. It is very cheering to see so many patriotic faces here, and more especially the patriotic faces of the ladies. [Applause.] I am sure we are all right when they are present with us. I rely as much on their patriotism as I do upon that of the gentlemen, and perhaps a little more—(laughter—and I appreciate for it. I know some traitors among the women of the North; but I have not found any among the ladies. Their efforts have been felt and experienced throughout the army, most effectually, and my only surprise is that, after all their efforts, there are so many deserters from the army. However, I hope to have better times. I look for union, without it there can be no help for it. Our country is in a perilous condition, and it requires the efforts of all the patriotism we have in the North, East and West to restore us to what we once were—a prosperous country, with an empire extending from the frozen regions of the North to the burning sands of the South, with a population of more than thirty-one millions, enjoying a prosperity unparalleled in the history of nations, every town and city and hamlet growing rich, as if by magic, and none so prosperous as that part of the country which is now in a state of rebellion. How is it now? A deadly contest exists, and without cause or justification. The South had no cause whatever—none. They commenced at a moment when we were more prosperous than at any other time, and when the Government was in their own hands except the President—the Senate, the House of Representatives, the Supreme Court, were in their hands. I am not prepared to make you a speech. I did not understand that I was to be called upon, for I knew you would have a number of very eloquent gentlemen who will be able to discuss the state of the country much better than I can. I will simply say—which is, I suppose, all you want to know—that I am opposed to the separation of the country—(applause)—I am opposed to all compromises—(great cheering)—I am opposed to all kinds of remarkings—(applause)—and I will never be satisfied, so far as I am concerned, until we shall have—the country, the whole country, and nothing but the country—[cheers]—and no man (and I am sure none of the ladies will say otherwise) who goes for less can be a friend to his country. If there is one, the sooner he goes south the better. "Good," applause.] I think you for the honor you have conferred upon me. [Great applause.]

The Union Glee Club then sang with fine effect two stanzas of the "Star-Spangled Banner," after which the time having arrived for the

REGULAR MEETING,

Mayor OPDYKE took the chair and read

MAYOR OPDYKE'S SPEECH.

I have been selected to call you to order and to announce the first order of business this evening. You will remember that that great meeting held at Cooper Institute last week resolved itself into a Loyal League, and appointed a Committee, under whose auspices that meeting was called, to effect an organization and to suggest the names of officers for the organization. In conformity with that order, your Committee are prepared to submit the by-laws and the slate of officers.

The following resolutions, by-laws, and names of officers were then read by Judge SANDS, and adopted unanimously by the meeting:

LOYAL LEAGUE OF UNION CITIZENS.

At a meeting of loyal Union citizens, held at the Cooper Institute in the City of New-York, on the 6th day of March, 1863, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

1. Resolved, That it is the duty of every citizen to unite in all proper efforts to preserve and perpetuate the Union in accordance with the Constitution.

2. Resolved, That the conduct of disaffected persons, claiming to be citizens of the United States, yet joining in their attempts to embarrass and impede the action of the legally constituted authorities, and in the utterance of treasonable sentiments, deserves and should receive the condemnation of every loyal citizen.

3. Resolved, That the loyal people of New-York hereby pledge their fortunes, their influence and their honor, in the support of the national authority in every vigorous and determined effort, by force of arms, as far as may be, to secure a complete and final suppression of the unhallowed and atrocious insurrection which now desolates our country.

4. Resolved, That the army and navy of the United States owe their undivided allegiance to the Constitution they have sworn to support and defend, and that no soldier or sailor can rightfully hesitate in his obedience to the commands of superior officers, whose authority is derived from the Government of the nation.

5. Resolved, That every citizen owes allegiance to the Government, and he who denies its authority, or fails in his duty to uphold the honor of its flag, is an abettor of treason and should suffer the penalty due to the traitor.

6. Resolved, That this meeting, under solemn conviction of duty, and in a firm reliance on the justice of that Providence which guides and guards governments and peoples, does hereby resolve itself into a Loyal League of Union citizens, pledged to an unconditional support of the Government in all its constitutional efforts to suppress the rebellion, and an unconditioning opposition to treason in whatever form it appears.

Now we, loyal Union citizens of the United States of America, on assembling and again assembled, do reaffirm the said resolutions as constituting our PLATFORM AND DECLARATION OF PRINCIPLES, to which we pledge unswerving fidelity.

And we adopt the following PLAN OF ORGANIZATION:

First—Our name shall be "THE LOYAL LEAGUE OF UNION CITIZENS."

Second—The Officers of the League shall be:

A President,
Twelve Vice-Presidents,
A Treasurer,
A Secretary,

and an Executive Committee of Fifteen Members, with power to fill vacancies, and of which Committee the Officers of the League shall also be ex-officio members.

Third—The duties of the President, Vice-Presidents, Treasurer and Secretary shall be those usually discharged by such officers.

Fourth—It shall be the duty of the Executive Committee to call meetings of the League, to correspond with other loyal associations, to fill vacancies in the Board of Officers, and to devise, adopt, recommend and carry into effect such measures as shall be calculated to sustain the principles, promote the objects, and effect the purposes of the League, declared in the foregoing resolutions.

Fifth—No debt shall be contracted in the name or on the credit of this League.

Mayor OPDYKE introduced Mr. BRADY as the Chairman of the meeting, and on taking the Chair, Mr. BRADY spoke as follows:

SPEECH OF JAS. T. BRADY, ESQ.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN: It is hardly necessary for me to say how much prize I feel in being permitted to occupy the position to which I have been assigned to-night. If I had any vanity to gratify, the cup of its enjoyment would be full to overflowing, for I feel while I stand in your presence whatever of you ought to feel—that no honor is so great as an invitation to preside over such a meeting as this. [Applause.] It is my simple duty, on this occasion, as the presiding officer, to occupy that position which the gray dawn occupies in the coming of the great orb of day—I am but the feeble gleamering and forerunner of the eloquence by which you are to be gratified to-night. [Applause.] But with the privilege that belongs to a presiding officer, I will, for a very few minutes, indulge in some expression of the sentiment which pervades this assembly, for it is not the man who speaks that is the orator at a time like this—it is the feeling of inspiration that he catches from those [Applause] whom he addresses. On the banks of Southern rivers, at this moment when I address you, our fellow-countrymen, our fellow-townsmen—the beloved of the hearts of women who are here—lie down to-night in the thick mud for the poor reason that the enemies of his country may enjoy. We, in our comfortable homes, are horrified by hearing from the lips of men who profess to be American citizens, but who don't deserve the name—[great applause, and cries of "good, good"—we are horrified to hear now discouragement, which should be confined to the gin-shops, extended to the saloons and parlors of our Metropolis. I, for one, and you, for many, feel that we ought to encourage our brave soldiers in the field, who are pouring out their life blood in defence of the Union, and who are looking to us for encouragement. I say, if I desire no association, political or personal, with any man at the North who, at this moment, during a period of our history, are not in favor of the suppression of this rebellion by all the power of the people. I had the honor a few evenings since to address my fellow-citizens at Cooper Institute. Of course I knew that the position that I took would be subject to repeated comment, and there be any young man within the reach of my voice I could wish is looking forward to the time when trembling he may make his debut before a public assembly to whom he may say, I want to say to him that there is but one rule—that men who dare to address his fellow-beings should be, at least, of double all manner when he addresses his brethren. [Applause.] I have not—for I regard it as a compliment—been about my duties as an editor long. It is the month of March, and the prime of March is in its fire and frost, and I love a stout heart in the infancy from the feeling that of his mother. [Applause.] He is entitled to listen to praise, but it is wise to attend to criticism. If I know myself, the most important object I possess is my own character, into the support of which I have made with my manhood. But I am a little afraid of the criticism I received the other night. I do say, and I say it in the presence of that I represent, that though I have been in New-York for about a quarter of a century, I have heard in the privacy of social intercourse sentiments expressed by Northern women which my manhood, as a man, would not permit me to censure, but unconditioning that sex from which men derive their greatest encouragement in the hour of peril, whether it belongs to the battle-field or the hospital. [Applause.] One pious editor thought it was too gallant, and another editor, not so pious, but who understands me much better, thought that I was willing too much gallant. All I have to say to both of them is that my country is in peril. When the Spartan mother, giving a shield to her son, said, "Return with it or on it," there was a lesson of history every equalled and translated by that other Spartan mother who, when one son told her that his sword was too short, said: "Advance but one more to meet the enemy, and it will be long enough for your purpose." [Applause.] I know that loyal women of the North agree to the sentiments which I have thus feebly expressed, and I know that all the men in this assembly—and would to God that all the men in my country would—agree to that motto promulgated in the device upon the escutcheon of a noble English aristocrat, who honored and loved the land of his birth: "For the King—for the country always." I would not be willing to encourage the circulation of reports which good-natured friends always bring to you when they think you are assailed. I have been said that it is a common error never to be forgiven by a party—but the Democratic party—that I have deserted my party. I shall not take occasion now to answer that, but there will a time come, and shortly, in which I will do it. [Applause.] But, I have this to say, that all allegiance to the Democratic party is to be surpassed by turning my back upon the land of my birth and upon the hopes which—that land in the day of her darkness and peril—inspires. [Thunders of applause, and three cheers for BRADY.] They tell me that some gentlemen in New-York are objecting to the connection of the war between the Administration and myself. I would like to answer you if I had time [cries of "go on"] by telling you who are the people from whom this objection comes—[applause]—the parasites, disappointed politicians who think that ABRAHAM LINCOLN is disloyal. [Voices—FERNANDO WOOD, and great laughter and applause.] I hear some names mentioned in this assembly which are obnoxious to my mind. [Renewed laughter and applause.] It is peculiarly exhilarating to a man who knows how the ridiculous and the serious always associate themselves together in the great affairs of life—I say it is perfectly exhilarating to me to find him, who belongs to a crew that, in the language of SHAKESPEARE, are the reek of the leaky fens coming out of the slough of debasement with an odor of offence in his nostrils and complaining that there is no fresh air in that neighborhood. [Great laughter.] The thing personal, which my friend has anticipated the position of Mayor of Gotham, [laughter and cries of "Wood,"] I would say that I remember that the City of Cologne, which produces the perfume that no doubt has given fragrance to the handkerchief of many a lady present, is remarkable in no degree for the sweet odors that attach to it. [Applause.] But I will not detain you a moment longer. It is my privilege and my pleasure, and I have the honor to introduce to you as the next speaker on this occasion, Ex-Senator WRIGHT, of Indiana. [Applause.]

SPEECH OF EX-SENATOR WRIGHT, OF INDIANA.

Mr. WRIGHT, after the applause which had greeted him had subsided, proceeded to say that he had no time to travel over the past. We have too many men in this country who at this hour speak of the past history of the country—men who seem to be gratified in taking this retrospective view to ascertain the causes of our troubles. He had no such intention. He believed that "when night comes, that the leaf of the day's history is written." He would rather ask, what is the duty of to-day? Let the people respond. What is the duty of loyal citizens of this country to-day? [Applause.] For himself, he had two or three principles that he took for his government in this hour of our country's trial. He thought the true Democracy, at this time, when there are armed traitors in the land, is war Democracy. [Applause.] He knew of no other kind of true Democracy, and he will down as the first rule of his government that when the legally constituted Government declares war in this country, it was his duty as a loyal man to aside by that decision, and to sustain the Government in every way in his power. [Applause.] My second principle is that I will not hamstring my Government and its temporary ruler. I will not assail my Government for the sake of any opposition to its temporary ruler. [Applause.] And my third principle is that if there is anything in the way of this Government—any institution, organization or association, anything in the way of this Government, that thing has got to fall. [Applause and cheers.] If it is necessary, in order to preserve this Government, that banks, or railroads, or slavery, or anything beside, must be broken down, it must. [Applause.] These are the leading thoughts which I take into my legs and for my rule in this controversy. He said the Government was in a family. It mere was a son who was insubordinate, to whom he made to submit. So it was with the Government. The compact of the States was a marriage, and what God has joined together, no man should put asunder. Whenever they separated the Union, what had they left? Nothing but anarchy and ruin. The first thing of opposition to the Government was the subject of arrests; but the Constitution warranted it. The first vote he ever gave was for JEFFERSON, and then the Democratic party was in the ground that the President had the right to detain what power he had, under the Constitution, and here he conceded that power to the present President. The power of arbitrary arrest was in the Constitution, and it was placed there for the purpose of punishing certain crimes before they had become complete, and in cases where a public trial would defeat the ends of public justice. Notwithstanding the war had lasted twenty-two months there had not been twelve men who could complain of improper arrest, and not one of them but who could have been discharged by taking the oath of allegiance. [Applause.] If he had to say when peace would come, it would be when traitors were punished, and treason made odious. [Applause.] He feared it never would come until that was done. There was a certain class of politicians in whom the nigger was the alpha and omega of their stock in trade—[applause]—and if you took that away there was nothing left them; and when they said the policy of this Government was to make black men our equals, and to have them put upon the ballot-box to outvote the descendants of truth and fidelity. Nor was it their policy to pay for the confiscation of negroes by taxation, but to confiscate the property of rebels and to apply that to the purpose. He regarded that the proclamation was not issued by ABRAHAM LINCOLN as President, but as the Commander-in-Chief of our army and navy. [Applause.] He understood it to be an article of war, and it was meant to weaken their enemy all they could. [Applause.] He would see all power to save the life of this nation. [Applause.] When days called about being Democrats, he would say that JEFFERSON and BURR, JACKSON and CALHOUN, DOUGLAS and BRECKINRIDGE were alike Democrats, and would ask which of those he followed. Men were asked on the question when this war was going to end; he would tell them when it was going to end; it would end whenever the eyes of three millions of white men in the South are opened to understand this controversy, and they were being opened now; it might be slow, by imperceptible degrees, but there was light breaking into the hearts of those men and they were being undeceived. He asked if there was a man who dreamed the institutions of the South would be the same when the war was ended as they were before. He said the institution of Slavery was becoming weaker every hour, and the white men of the South were learning every thing every day, and the moment they undeceived their countrymen, our fellow-townsmen—the beloved of the hearts of women who are here—lie down to-night in the thick mud for the poor reason that the enemies of his country may enjoy. We, in our comfortable homes, are horrified by hearing from the lips of men who profess to be American citizens, but who don't deserve the name—[great applause, and cries of "good, good"—we are horrified to hear now discouragement, which should be confined to the gin-shops, extended to the saloons and parlors of our Metropolis. I, for one, and you, for many, feel that we ought to encourage our brave soldiers in the field, who are pouring out their life blood in defence of the Union, and who are looking to us for encouragement. It is my privilege and my pleasure, and I have the honor to introduce to you as the next speaker on this occasion, Ex-Senator WRIGHT, of Indiana. [Applause.]

SPEECH OF ANDREW JOHNSON, OF TENNESSEE.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN: You perceive, without my observing the fact, that I am not in condition to address an audience like this on the present occasion, for my voice and my health are alike gone, from exposure to speaking and the irregularities of the weather. But I think that I would perform the better part by proposing that the meeting dismiss at just this point. For, assuming that I was in a condition to speak, I assure you that the important occasion, I know, that nothing I could say would add anything of interest to what has been already said; but, as the President of the meeting in his eloquent opening remarks, and by the distinguished gentlemen from Indiana, was has just taken his seat. Really, I am serious when I say, I think the meeting ought to close right here, for it seems to me that this great audience has arrived at a proper conclusion in reference to the rebellion that is now upon the country. Not only my health and condition of my voice embarrass me on this present occasion, but to be seated before such a vast assembly on this so well calculated to embarrass the most experienced speaker. It is true that in coming to the City of New-York by invitation for the purpose of making a speech I expected to see a large assembly such as one as New-York can furnish at any time, but to pour waiting myself on this occasion I did not, I am frank to say, expect to meet all creation assembled here to-night. [Laughter.] I had no such hope, for I knew if they all assembled it would be impossible for me to address them in a voice sufficiently sonorous to be heard. I might add, that my embarrassment is increased by a feeling of having to follow two such speakers. You have been entertained and interested. I have been interested and instructed by what I have heard here to-night. I feel confident that I cannot add anything to what has been the meeting should adjourn right at this time. [Voices—"No," "No." We came to hear you.] Gentlemen and Ladies and Gentlemen, I propose, if it be the desire that I should proceed, I must premise, in the first place, that if there is any, so far as I am concerned, who have come here to be entertained or highly tickled by what is sometimes termed eloquence, or to hear sounding, resounding, beautiful strings of speeches with rhetorical flourishes and all that, I will apprise them in the beginning that if they have come with that expectation they will be disappointed. Let me say to Mr. President and the right of the power to suspend it. It can be done in time of rebellion. There is another thing that is admitted by all that there are a great many in the land who ought to be arrested, and we believe the writ, in this case, ought to be suspended. [Applause.] When there is a large number of persons in the land trying to divide and break up the Government, ought they not to be arrested? and must not necessary exercise that power? All admit that it ought to be exercised; yet the query comes up: Who shall exercise it? But who is it that complains of the exercise of this power? Is there any man throughout this vast assembly that has any treason lurking in his bosom, who fears being arrested? Is there one? [A Voice—"No."] Why then complain? Who is that complaining? [A Voice—"Jeff. Davis."] Is there one who are apprehensive, because treason is lingering in their bosoms? I am not in the habit of telling anecdotes. If I were, I would tell one that used to be told of Lorenzo Dow. ["Go on, let's have it."] He was going to preach in a grove in the South, and, as he went along a man stopped him by the wayside and said he had that some one had stolen his ass. Well, Dow looked at him; "well," said he, "I am going to speak a sermon up here and I will settle all this." In going along to the meeting-house he found a round stone weighing about a pound and a half, picked it up, carried it to the meeting-house with him and laid it down on the pulpit; this, of course, attracted much attention. After he had preached the sermon, he picked up the stone, looked at it and turned it over and over, but said: "I have been informed by my neighbor, I calling him by name, "that this ass stolen last night; this stone weighs a pound and a half and I intend to knock down the man that stole that ass." And throwing himself forward, there was one fellow dodged down behind the seat. [Laughter.] Said he: "That is the man that stole the ass," said, if you want to find out traitors just look round, and shake a well of habeas corpus. [Laughter and applause.] and you will see them dodge, and skulk, and conceal in everywhere, or wherever they are. And the only objection I have to President Lincoln and his Cabinet is that they have not acted in this respect. [Applause.] And so, for an complaint goes in reference to President LINCOLN and his Cabinet in the prosecution of this war, these complaints have no weight with me whatever, and I repeat again, the only fault I have to find with them is that they have not done more to put down this rebellion. [Applause.] But in the most objections urged against the Administration by those who are trying to destroy the Government—with all their complaints of a violated Constitution, the law not enforced, the public being plundered by conditions of every description—you hear these State conferences and constitutional make the inquiry whether JEFF. DAVIS and his traitors have violated the Constitution? ["No."] Do you hear them talk about the South trying to form foreign alliances? Why, the Constitution, in language not to be misunderstood, has expressed that no State shall enter into any treaty with any State, or form alliance with a foreign Power. Yet by the Confederacy alliances have been attempted to be formed with foreign Powers. Do you hear any complaint from these gentlemen? Now, I am all ready to go into detail. For the sake of the argument, suppose it were true that President LINCOLN and his Cabinet officers had violated the Constitution of the United States, if they could prove a violation of the Constitution at all, it would be a violation of it for the preservation of it, and to secure it from those who would destroy it. [Applause.] But these loaded traitors that stand with impious hands upon the archives of the State, to pull that great instrument, that great chart of freedom, from its shrine, and trample it in the precious dust, it under foot, there is no complaint of their violations, but the cry still is for compromise compromise! Do you know what was Gen. JACKSON's position upon this subject in 1832? And you know most of us Tennessee people think that when we die we will go to Gen. JACKSON. [Laughter.] I would to God that the old man were among us now. ["Good," and applause.] I wish he were here, with the long list of patriots that I could enumerate. [Applause.] If he had been here at the commencement of this rebellion, he would have crushed it as he did that in 1832—as easy as he would tread the spark out upon the mountain, or turn the fly off a table. It seems to me, were it possible for intelligence to be communicated to the dead, and that old man could be made aware of what is now transpiring—if he could see treason stalking abroad, and hear a repetition of the seditious and diabolical doctrines that he crushed out in 1832—it seems to me that the old man would turn in his coffin. An incident was related to me by WILLIAM DONELSON—not ANDREW J.—who lives near the Hermitage, that after visiting his tomb, in place of the head that Stars and Stripes, the old man reverently and with tears let down that place he saw there, instead of the flag he expected to see the entombed lamp out of his coffin. [Applause.] Hence, were it possible for intelligence to be communicated to the dead, it seems to me that the old man would arise from the tombstone respect his emphatic sentiment: "The Federal Union—it must be preserved." When any Government is imperilled, I care not who strikes the blow, my sympathies are with the Government. Then we say, what the Constitution provides, that the writ may be suspended in favor of rebellion. And that the United States is bound to guarantee to each State in this Union a Republican form of Government. That is what we want. And, in the name of a bleeding country and a violated Constitution, we stand before you to-night pleading for a Republican form of Government. [Applause.] But after the rebellion has been commenced, the Constitution violated, then the cry is, "Compromise, compromise!" A great statesman, as my distinguished friend has told you, has been made, about the statesmen of the north of Indiana, great. Still, there is one thing clear, that statesmanship and the right of the power to suspend it. It can be done in time of rebellion. There is another thing that is admitted by all that there are a great many in the land who ought to be arrested, and we believe the writ, in this case, ought to be suspended. [Applause.] When there is a large number of persons in the land trying to divide and break up the Government, ought they not to be arrested? and must not necessary exercise that power? All admit that it ought to be exercised; yet the query comes up: Who shall exercise it? But who is it that complains of the exercise of this power? Is there any man throughout this vast assembly that has any treason lurking in his bosom, who fears being arrested? Is there one? [A Voice—"No."] Why then complain? Who is that complaining? [A Voice—"Jeff. Davis."] Is there one who are apprehensive, because treason is lingering in their bosoms? I am not in the habit of telling anecdotes. If I were, I would tell one that used to be told of Lorenzo Dow. ["Go on, let's have it."] He was going to preach in a grove in the South, and, as he went along a man stopped him by the wayside and said he had that some one had stolen his ass. Well, Dow looked at him; "well," said he, "I am going to speak a sermon up here and I will settle all this." In going along to the meeting-house he found a round stone weighing about a pound and a half, picked it up, carried it to the meeting-house with him and laid it down on the pulpit; this, of course, attracted much attention. After he had preached the sermon, he picked up the stone, looked at it and turned it over and over, but said: "I have been informed by my neighbor," calling him by name, "that this ass stolen last night; this stone weighs a pound and a half and I intend to knock down the man that stole that ass." And throwing himself forward, there was one fellow dodged down behind the seat. [Laughter.] Said he: "That is the man that stole the ass," said, if you want to find out traitors just look round, and shake a well of habeas corpus. [Laughter and applause.] and you will see them dodge, and skulk, and conceal in everywhere, or wherever they are. And the only objection I have to President Lincoln and his Cabinet is that they have not acted in this respect. [Applause.] And so, for an complaint goes in reference to President LINCOLN and his Cabinet in the prosecution of this war, these complaints have no weight with me whatever, and I repeat again, the only fault I have to find with them is that they have not done more to put down this rebellion. Preparations for the Attack on Charleston and Savannah.

Interesting Miscellaneous Intelligence.

THE EXPECTED ATTACK ON SAVANNAH.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF SOUTH CAROLINA, GEORGIA AND FLORIDA, SAVANNAH, Feb. 23, 1863.

The Brigadier General Commanding having received from the proper officer the report of the number of men, officers, and horses, and the condition of the troops under his command with the attack, accept assistance for the defense of this city, and that he desires all able-bodied negroes in Georgia to participate themselves in the construction of such fortifications as may be deemed necessary, in this vicinity, with double-barrel guns, of such weapons as they can obtain, to provide themselves with all the ammunition they can procure, and to be in readiness to report to such call.

They will not be summoned, here and the actual approach of the Abolition forces, leaders, chief and subordinate, will be organized, and be reported with the number of men and arms, the quantity of ammunition and other supplies, and the address of the officer in command. They will be summoned when the emergency arises, and returned to their homes the moment it has passed.

The Brigadier General Commanding is well assured that thousands of patriot citizens will organize and proclaim themselves ready to defend the gateway to their state, if, if need be, in the breach before the brave soldiers of the Confederacy, who, during long months, have held back the darkness by their valor, and have cheerfully sealed with their blood the cement of their country.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF SOUTH CAROLINA, GEORGIA AND FLORIDA, SAVANNAH, Feb. 20, 1863.

Notice is hereby given to all persons interested in the recent proclamation of Gen. BEAUREGARD, that it will afford great pleasure to the officers of this department to aid, to their power, in the execution of the purpose. Large bodies are sufficiently represented to warrant the belief that the force will be a formidable one. Until the last hour, some must be disappointed, because the means of transportation have been much reduced by the exigencies of the war.

SALT FOR AND SPARES.

From the Charleston Mercury, Feb. 18.

We observed a slow throng on the street who were evidently more bent on business than pleasure. Well they may be, for the fate of the city is trembling in the balance. The health of the city is good. Small-pox is rapidly abating; only twenty-seven being vaccinated; a few cases of scarlet fever.

Gen. BEAUREGARD is at the right place with plenty of men, he has sacrificed for three thousand regrets. Who knows but "spares" is trumps?

FURLOUGHS STOPPED.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT SOUTH CAROLINA, GEORGIA AND FLORIDA, SAVANNAH, Feb. 18, 1863.

General Orders No. 4.—Furloughs in existence, non-commissioned officers and privates, leaving this Department, not based on surgeon's certificates, are revoked, and both officers and soldiers will report without delay to their respective stations, to be ready to meet the enemy. Furloughs and leave soldiers will not linger by the wayside.

By command of Gen. BEAUREGARD.

THE ATTACK ON GALVESTON.

WARNING FROM THE FRENCH CONSUL.

The French Consul at Galveston has issued the following address "to the French, Spanish and Italian subjects in the Counties of Colorado, Austin and Fayette:"

"DEAR FRIENDS, Martial law has been declared in your counties, on account of some insurrectionary movements. I hope that none of you have taken part in it; and if you should have been induced to it, beware not to join the enemies of your adopted country.

As aliens, be neutral, and your nationality shall be respected. I have full confidence in Major Gen. J. B. MAGRUDER. His chivalry and integrity are sufficient protection against any injustice.

GEN. BUCKNER AFTER THE SPECULATORS.

By command of Maj.-Gen. BUCKNER, at New-Orleans, Maj. WHITTAKER is empowered to impress all subsistence stores and cattle in the hands of speculators and other parties, paying a fair value for the same, and in all cases leaving enough to subsist the families of those from whom the impressment is made. In accordance with the above, Maj. WHITTAKER issues the following order:

Hereafter the price of cattle on foot is established at twenty cents per pound net in this city, or its equivalent in the interior for shipping the same to this market. All cattle arriving here will be taken and paid for at this price, except lots obtained by butchers and other parties at the established price, for the retail trade at their respective stalls in the market, or sold as such to families for consumption at a reasonable profit over twenty cents per pound net on foot.

All holders of provisions and cattle in this district are required to report to the Chief of Subsistence their surplus stock on hand, and offer the same to Government or consumers at reasonable prices. Planters are required to sell on plantation all they can spare to Government and consumers, or ship to their agents their surplus provisions for sale at current rates to consumers only.

ENGLAND AND THE SOUTH.

From the Columbia South Carolinian.

It is, as we learn from an authentic source, not a fact that the British Cabinet is so much opposed to our Confederacy.

When the Trent affair occurred, and our Commissioners were taken from a British vessel, Lord Palmerston wrote a demand for their restoration in such strong terms that war with the United States would certainly have been the result. The dispatch was submitted to the Queen for her signature, and Prince ALBERT insisted she should not sign it. He declared he would never recognize a Government where the peculiar institution existed, and he impressed it so strongly on the Queen that she considers it a religious duty to carry out his urgent request to her. This prevents the renewal of any Cabinet proposal to her on the subject, as it is well known all subjects are avoided that are likely to give her any mental disturbance.

REPORTS FROM VICKSBURGH.

VICKSBURGH, Monday, Feb. 23, 1863.

Correspondence of the Grenada Appeal.

Yesterday morning a grand scene presented itself in the distance, as the large fleet lay exposed in full view of the naked eye. As they had all withdrawn the previous evening, it was hardly expected that they would return so soon and so quickly. There was apparently no motion among them, and steam was down, indicating that they must have withdrawn only in the night. It was a confirmation of our conviction that the enemy had not withdrawn, and that, instead of leaving, they were only preparing to come with stronger force.

The morning was spent quiet, tolerably dull, during the forenoon. The attention of our people was directed to the lower part of the canal, where the Ben Bee and another transport from below were busily employed. The Ben is in behind the woods, where she is sheltered from full view, but enough has been done of her to make her out. The other craft is a light-draft tender, and is also lying behind the bend below the mouth of the canal. There is good reason for the supposition expressed as the cause of these movements, that the Bee is preparing for the reception of the wounded, and the extent of the injuries received by our fleet, in the late engagement. It was a confirmation of our conviction that the enemy had not withdrawn, and that, instead of leaving, they were only preparing to come with stronger force.

[illegible] PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

SIR: We, the undersigned inhabitants of the borough of Birmingham, desire to express our deep and heartfelt sympathy with you in your endeavor to preserve the Union of which great country you are the chosen chief magistrate, and whose Constitution you have sworn to defend. The attempt of the Southern States to form—as their leaders unblushingly avow—for the first time in the history of the world, a Confederacy, with Slavery, and the extension of Slavery to you appears, as it must to you, we report with horror and abhorrence. And we earnestly pray that the [illegible] of events may strengthen you and your cause in order that the present unholy contest may be speedily brought to a successful issue, and, as the crown of all, that, freed from the fearful curse with their accompanying blessings, may be given to the millions of our colored brethren now in bondage; that you may be the chosen instrument in effecting this glorious emancipation is our earnest hope; and if in your aspirations for the freedom of the negro the sympathy and good wishes of all true men in Europe shall cheer your heart in moments of doubt and perplexity, you may assuredly feel convinced that such sympathy and good wishes are not withheld. For ourselves, we beg to assure you of our earnest belief in the justice of your cause. Of our warm sympathy with your noble efforts for emancipation, and of our certain belief in your ultimate triumph. We hold that your cause is the cause of humanity, of religion and freedom; and in this belief we again express our sympathy with you in your momentous and trying position, and assure you that, whatever may be said to the contrary, the vast majority of the English people are anxious for your success in this great and terrible conflict.

Mr. ADAMS, in reply to the deputation, said:

GENTLEMEN: I am exceedingly happy to receive this address, and it will give me great pleasure to transmit it at once to the President of the United States. It gives me the greater satisfaction from the fact which you have mentioned, that it is perfectly spontaneous. There have been some amusing intimations or insinuations in some of the newspapers in this country to the effect that the Government of the United States had something or other—they do not say what—to do with getting up these demonstrations. A statement of that kind is on the face of it so ridiculous as hardly to need further notice, but at the same time it is a source of gratification to me personally as the representative of the United States, to be able to say that in no respect, directly or indirectly, in any agency whatever, has the Government of the United States been concerned in this movement from beginning to end. It is, therefore, with great satisfaction that we regard this as the spontaneous outburst of the popular sentiment of Great Britain, not so much in sympathy with any political organization on the other side of the Atlantic, as in testimony to their devotion to one great principle, which ought to animate the people equally in both hemispheres. It is in that light more particularly that I am disposed to attach great importance to all these demonstrations. They appear to feel, which runs above all classes and distinctions of nation or of rank, and looks simply to the rights of the human race wherever they exist. That is an indication of progress all over the world. We in America at this moment are going through a critical state, just as the Emperor of Russia, in his country, brought about a social change of the most radical character in the endeavor to relieve what is called the lowest class of people from the burdens that had been entailed upon them from generations long ago. In America that struggle has a peculiar intensity and difficulty, because it is not simply interlaced with contemplated social changes, but because the principle has an affiliation with political power so intimate that it is hardly possible to separate them without a social convulsion. It is, therefore, not at all surprising that in the different stages of this struggle, you see the whole social system rent and torn. But looking at it in a philosophical point of view, it seems to me nothing more nor less than we should expect under the circumstances, and it does not in any degree discourage me in my expectations that ultimately that great country will survive all these temporary difficulties, and will come out of this struggle renewed and improved for a career hereafter of more fortunate and more prosperous than before. There has never been a time since the foundation of the Government of the United States that this evil has not loomed before the eyes of all public men. They have always looked forward to this peculiar state of things as the one which would bring with it at some time or other the greatest danger to us. That time has now come. It was for the sake of postponing it that the well-meant efforts of our public men were directed, not to be charged to our discredit, doubtless whether on the whole they really consulted the good of the country in effecting that postponement so long. At any rate, be that as it may, the time has now come, and we are passing through the stage of trial; but I have no doubt that the sympathies of all honest men in all parts of the world, will contribute a great deal to soften the severity of those trials to the persons who are necessarily engaged in them. I shall give your directions, gentlemen, that your address shall be forwarded to the United States by the steamer which will depart to-morrow, (Friday.)

The deputation then thanked His Excellency, and withdrew.

The Marriage of the Prince of Wales.

THE PRELIMINARY PREPARATIONS.

From the European Times, Feb. 28.

The preparations for the royal wedding are going forward with all activity at Windsor, both within the precincts of the Castle and in the town. The arrangements in the interior of the chapel and choir itself, are now nearly all completed, as far as regards the accommodation for the visitors. These seats are arranged in blocks, spreading backward into the aisles, and tapering to a narrow frontage between the columns of the nave, so as to allow of yeomen of the guard being stationed in front of each column. The whole of the centre of the nave is to be covered with a carpet specially made for the occasion, with an embroidered border bearing the Prince's coronet and the monograms of the Prince and Princess entwined. Very large platforms have been erected on the right and left of the organ loft—that on the right, over Sir Reginald Bray's chapel, being for the use of the musicians and choir; that on the left for a limited number of the Queen's household. Within the choir itself no galleries have been attempted. Only a raised wooden dais, immediately in front of the communion table, is placed there, and on this the ceremony will take place. With the side aisles of the choir, however, no reserve in the matter of seats is attempted, and every possible nook from which even a glimpse can be had into the interior, and very many from which none can be had at all, have been handed over to the carpenters to fit with materials, either for a sitting or a standing, according as the architecture permits. The carved oak paneling in front of the royal pew over the communion table has been removed down to within a few inches of the floor of the pew itself, so that her Majesty will not only see the ceremony from that spot, but be as plainly seen herself as if she sat on the raised dais. The memorial window dedicated to the memory of the late Prince Consort by the Dean and Chapter of Windsor is almost finished. The Welsey Chapel, in which the Ambassadors are to assemble on the morning of the marriage, is also in course of completion. The temporary buildings, the procession-hall, and waiting and retiring rooms, which are being built outside the Chapel, are fast advancing, though by no means so forward but that one can see at a glance it will require hard and extra work to get them done before the appointed day. After the procession through Windsor on the 7th inst., the Princess with the Prince of Wales will alight at the Slough Station of the Great Western Railway, and not at the Windsor terminus, as was at first intended. From Slough they will drive to the Castle, through Eton and through the town of Windsor, passing the Castle by the Henry VIII. gateway. Already the townspeople of Windsor are making great preparations to do honor to the arrival. One very fine arch is nearly completed at Windsor Bridge, and another still larger is being erected across the entrance to the Castle itself. Both of these are to be illuminated at night. Up to the end of last week the applications that in from the commanding officers of volunteer corps to be present in Hyde Park on the 5th showed that the total force would be at least 16,000 men. The royal carriage containing the Prince and Princess will, it is said, diverge from the roadway through the Park so as to pass close along the front of the massive line of volunteers.

THE PRINCESS.

A Copenhagen letter of Feb. 17 says: "The news the time fixed for the departure of the Princess Alexandra approaches, the more clearly is evinced the attachment to her Royal Highness which is felt by all classes of the community in this kingdom. A grand ball was given a few evenings ago by her father, Prince Christian of Denmark, at which all the distinguished personages in the Capital were present; and it is stated that an opportunity should then be afforded to the amiable Princess to bid adieu to those to whom her Royal Highness has so greatly endeared herself, not only the Danish and foreign Ministers, but all who have acquired a name either in State affairs, in literature or in arms, with each other in expressing their regrets at Denmark being thus deprived of one of its brightest ornaments, though they could not at the same time refrain from offering their congratulations to one in whom the whole nation is interested, as the brilliant [illegible]

NEWS OF THE DAY.

THE REBELLION.

We have this morning a partial confirmation of the report of a decided success in the Yazoo River, as published yesterday—that is, we have another report, a little more definite. A dispatch from Memphis states that Admiral PORTER has received information that the Yazoo Pass Expedition had captured Yazoo City, and destroyed the rebel fleet known to be there. Another dispatch from Memphis states that the Admiral was momentarily expecting intelligence from Haines' Bluff that our forces had arrived there from above—which would be the signal for a combined attack upon the rebel fortifications there. Meantime an official dispatch from another source lends a new aspect to affairs on the Mississippi. Gen. ROSECRANS has telegraphed to the War Department a report which has reached him, to the effect that the rebels have evacuated Vicksburgh. Information had previously reached Washington that they were removing their stores and war material into the interior, and the report of the evacuation is not at all unlikely.

Just before going to press we received a dispatch from Cairo giving advices from Memphis to Thursday evening. An important movement of troops was taking place below, from which results were expected immediately. It was believed that Vicksburgh must soon capitulate or suffer a worse fate. The Yazoo Pass movement appears to have given us some great advantage, which was to be seized at once.

Our advices from the army under Gen. ROSECRANS are of the most gratifying character. The men and officers are in high spirits, confident and cheerful—well-clothed, well-fed and well-armed.

We have advices from Port Royal to the 10th inst., by an arrival at this port. Gen. HUNTER's great movements had not yet commenced, but an indication of its imminence will be found in the General Order issued by him on the 5th, published in the TIMES this morning. He says that after long and wearying delays, due to causes over which no one in the Department had control, his command has at length the cheering prospect of active and very important service. On the same day Gen. HUNTER issued an order relieving Brig.-Gen. HAGLER from duty, and ordering him to New-York, to report to the Adjutant-General. Another order, issued on the 6th, directs the drafting of all the able-bodied negroes in the Department, between the ages of 18 and 50, not otherwise employed by the Government, to garrison the various forts and posts, and thus relieve the white soldiers for more active duty.

Accounts from South Carolina state that the magnificent English steamer Queen of the Wave was on Sunday, the 1st instant, stranded near the mouth of the North Santee, whilst endeavoring to run into Georgetown, S. C. The gunboat Commanche got sight of her, but was unable to follow her until the tide rose, and then found her aground and abandoned by her crew, who had first attempted to blow her up, but the explosion only slightly lifted her upper deck. The Commanche sent a boat, armed with a howitzer, to board her, and met a rebel boat coming from her with a Lieutenant and six soldiers on board. They surrendered, and were sent prisoners to Port Royal. The cargo of the Queen of the Wave consists of clothing and ammunition, and is said to be very valuable. Several vessels had been sent from Port Royal to try and get her off, and, if not, to save as much as possible of her cargo.

The United States Senate adjourned sine die yesterday, after a brief Executive session.

THE STATE LEGISLATURE.

In the Senate, yesterday, very little business of interest was done.

In the Assembly, among the bills favorably reported were the Broadway Railroad bill, the bill to construct a railroad between Morrisania and West Farms, the bill extending aid to the Albany and Susquehannah Railroad, and the bill for the regulation of the rate of interest. The bill authorizing the International Ferry Railroad in New-York was introduced; also, the bill relative to the payment of arrears of taxes and assessments in New-York. A bill providing for the election of Commissioners of the Croton Aqueduct Board was passed. The bill to incorporate the New-York Women's Medical College was referred, with power to report complete.

GENERAL NEWS.

The "Union League of New-York City" was inaugurated at the Academy of Music last evening by an audience of ladies and gentlemen, larger in numbers, and more enthusiastic in spirit than was probably ever before gathered within the walls of the Academy. The theatre was literally crammed from pit to dome long before the proceedings were opened, and in the course of the evening thousands were compelled to go away unable to gain admission. JAS. T. BRADY, Esq., was appointed Chairman of the meeting, and made the opening speech of the evening, which was even more emphatic, and anti-copperhanded than the one delivered by him at the Cooper Institute a week before. Mr. BRADY was followed by Gov. WRIGHT, of Indiana, and Gov. ANDY JOHNSON, of Tennessee, who were received with enthusiastic applause, and made out-and-out thoroughgoing war speeches. The meeting closed at 11 o'clock with a patriotic song by the Union Glee Club, followed by nine cheers for Gov. WRIGHT and JOHNSON, and the sentiments they had uttered.

The Rebel Cause of Strife.

The storm of war which gathers along the coast of South Carolina and Georgia, is manifestly not unlooked by the rebels. Every movement which comes from there speaks of immense preparations on their part to meet the imminent attack; and that these will be found to be skillful and extensive, we have no doubt. Nor do they confine themselves to mere material preparation—to building fortifications and mounting guns. They join with these, as we notice, something of the Chinese mode of warfare, to which they have shown themselves addicted heretofore. They do not, indeed, beat Chinese gongs, or put on hideous masks, or perform horrible contortions in front of our lines of battle; but the American gong, the newspaper, they bring into most vigorous use. The columns of the Charleston papers are filled with the most terrible threats of the fate which awaits our troops whenever the attack is made, and with loud-sounding glorification of the prowess of the rebels and the invulnerability of their fortifications.

The Charleston Mercury flourishes JEFF. DAVIS' Proclamation in the faces of our officers. It informs them that they "fight with halters around their necks;" that all who may be captured will "be turned over to the State tribunals as instigators of insurrection in the State, to be tried for their lives. The Governor of the State will demand their delivery for the enforcement of the laws of the State." Nor does it leave them in doubt as to the ultimate result which it purposes. It declares that "they will be hung in broad day, as sure as the day of their sentence arrives." And from this atrocity, which it so coolly proposes, it proceeds to argue that our officers will not do their duty. "No man," it says "will willingly go into an enterprise involving such consequences but from the sternest motives of self-interest and patriotism." And because, as it avers, our troops "fight only for a fanaticism which they despise, or for money or ambition—the lust of lucre or the lust of power"—it arrives at a doubt whether "any serious attempt will be made to take Charleston, if not attacked within ten days."

The ten days are passed, and Charleston has not been attacked, but we are tolerably confident that the hopes of the Mercury will never be fulfilled. No doubt it requires patriotism to induce men to enter upon such a contest with so barbarous a foe, but the rebels will find that the love of country burns in the hearts of our soldiers and officers too high to be put out by any such atrocious threats. If it were true that our soldiers had nothing in their hearts but "the lust of lucre or the lust of power," the rebels might hope to keep them back by threatening to hang them. But as it is, so far from checking the course of any one who is not a coward already, this threat of a halter will only nerve every arm, and fire every heart with a sterner determination that the men who have attempted to overthrow the fair building of American liberty, and have sunk to such depths of savagery in the desperation of their attempt, shall be taught that they have misjudged not only the power of the nation, but the firmness and fidelity of its soldiers. We should like nothing better, as an incentive to our troops, when the eventful hour draws near, than to have these threats proclaimed to them.

We have little fear that they would be ever carried out; but it may be that that one thing is needed to bring this nation to the necessary unity and persistence of purpose. Even the boldest Copperhead would hardly dare to urge the people to a peace with men who had hung our brothers, taken in open, honorable, patriotic war. And whatever the ferocity of South Carolina alone might do, we fancy that the Confederate authorities will see too clearly the terrible effects of such a course upon their cause, to allow them to carry into execution these bloody purposes.

"The Frenzy of the Hour."

The loyalists of Missouri have just experienced a sensation, in the publication of a letter, addressed by one Col. ALEXANDER M. WOOLFOLK, of the Missouri State Militia, to Maj. A. W. MULLINS, a member of the present General Assembly of Missouri. The letter takes a very wide range. It treats at large on the revolutionary spirit abroad. It says "the times are fraught with events of startling magnitude." It declares that, "in the frenzy of the hour, new and startling dogmas are daily broached, and seem to enlist the support of a party in the country, just in proportion to their strangeness and novelty." Having prepared the recipient of his epistolary favor for any absurdity, by these quite truthful preliminary statements, Col. WOOLFOLK proceeds to make his contribution to the "startling dogmas" of the frenzied hour. His proposition is that the Western States, disgusted with President LINCOLN and the war, and giving up the Union as hopeless, shall set up a new Republic for themselves, of which Missouri shall be "one of the brightest stars in the galaxy."

Col. WOOLFOLK does not fail to present in glowing colors the advantages to be gained by this counter revolution in the West. It is to involve all of the Northwestern States and Territories, and to include Michigan and Ohio. These, with the Slave States of Missouri and Kentucky, are to form the new Western Republic, which will cover an area of 1,015,450 square miles, and contain at the start 10,250,167 inhabitants. There is to be no tariff in the Western Republic—Chicago and New-Orleans are to become the great maritime cities of the Mississippi Valley; and "all the nations of the earth will pour in their supplies for the Western and Southern consumers at these ports of entry."

The public debts of the old Union and of the Southern Confederacy are to be deftly shoved from Western shoulders by this creation of a new Republic; and being thus free from vexatious taxation, the Western States will be free to develop the resources of their fertile valleys, and which the Mississippi Valley (Gloria) shall form the biggest empire of the world.

In less than thirty years it will have a population of sixty millions of inhabitants, and will rank as the wealthiest and most powerful nation on the globe. The bosom of the great deep will be covered with its commerce, and its banner float in the harbors of every civilized nation. * * * No more will the dark clouds of civil war envelop its fields in gloom, or the blood-red banner of revolution be unfurled from its hills. The flowers of peace will bloom upon the battle-fields of the past, and the Mississippi Valley, proud of its noble river ——

But we forbear. The expense of publishing this fustian from the original manuscript was met, it is alleged, by subscriptions of members of the Missouri Legislature, of the Western-Republic persuasion. We have no hope of compensation for immortalizing the "startling dogma" in the columns of the TIMES, and therefore we commit the rest of the raving to that perdition of silence that engulfs every other "frenzy of the hour."

Gen. SUMNER has just been assigned to command in Missouri, and his attention will doubtless be called to Col. WOOLFOLK's case, as well as that of all other ambitious architects of Western empires. If MULLINS has any Presidential aspirations in connection with the New Republic, he would do well to retire them speedily from public gaze. There is danger that a candidate for high honor may be brought too prominently before the people.

Europe and America—The Value of Union.

Americans are indignant because the Press and the publicists of Europe cannot be made to comprehend the nature of the cause which the North is battling to uphold. Why wonder at this perversity in foreigners, when we see a party growing up in our midst who pronounce that cause unjust and detestable, and who are laboring to destroy that unanimity in the Free States, which is indispensable to the triumph of the National Government?

The patriotic FLETCHER, of Saltoun, said "that the first duty of man was to die for his country; the second duty of man was to die for his country; the third duty of man was to die for his country." His country was bleak, rocky, mountainous Scotland—one of the smallest and poorest of kingdoms. But for the glory of our magnificent heritage, the men we speak of would not sacrifice a cent from their coffers, nor risk a scratch on their sacred persons. They have no love for the Union under whose flag they were born—no pride in that mighty Republic in whose greatness the humblest of its citizens share—no gratitude for the numberless blessings which its benign institutions have secured to them. They would apparently witness its dissolution, not only without regret, but with exultation.

There can be no more effective method of demonstrating the advantages of our national unity than by contrasting the condition of this country, before the outbreak of the rebellion, with that of Western Europe at the same time. The area of that portion of the territory of our Republic comprised within the thirty-four States, and the area of Western Europe—that is, of Europe minus Russia and the Ottoman Empire—are of nearly equal extent. In 1858, one Government swayed the destinies of the former; in the same year, fifty independent sovereignties held rule over the latter. The very different effects of these very different political systems on the interests of the people subject to their dominion are singularly striking. Americans grumble because they have now to maintain an immense military force—because taxes have become onerous, and trade has been interrupted. But what are temporary and passing grievances here are chronic and lasting grievances in Europe. There the mutual jealousy and animosity of so many autonomous Powers have for centuries rendered huge armies, heavy taxes and hostile tariffs essential to national existence, so that the burdens of the people are hardly less oppressive in peace than in war. Europe enjoyed a state of tranquillity in 1858, yet behold what, in that period of repose, were the number of her soldiers and the amount of her revenues. The strength of the armies of her various nations was, in that year, according to the "Encyclopædia Britannica," over 2,000,000 men, and their collective revenues from taxation $1,068,487,350, all drawn from the labor of the working classes. Such is the effect on the popular interests of the political system of Europe.

What a contrast to this did the condition of the Great Western Republic present, ere Southern incendiaries kindled the lurid flames of intestine war! Then the authority of the Federal Government was supreme from the Northern Lakes to the Mexican Gulf, from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean. One law, one Constitution, one light measure of taxation, prevailed throughout the length and breadth of the land. No hostile tariffs interfered with the trade of its various sections, or limited that free interchange of commodities whence so much of our material prosperity has arisen. Then no enormous debt, no onerous revenue, no Xerxian hosts were necessary to the nation's existence; but a few thousand troops sufficed to garrison its fortresses and keep in check the aboriginal savages, and less than $90,000,000 were needed to meet the annual expenditure of its administration. In short, a territory larger than all Western Europe had then a smaller standing army than the Pope, and was governed almost as cheaply as Prussia alone. While under the political system of Europe, which arrays race against race, and State against State, the people were groaning under oppressive burdens, and the prime of their youth were drawn from the pursuits of industry, to guard the existence, or minister to the ambition of rival rulers, the citizens of the American Republic, under their own peace-promoting and liberty-securing system, were in the perfect enjoyment of all those blessings of which that system is the sole and prolific source.

It was that union, which gave us unexampled prosperity, that greatness and glory, which, for eighty years, had rendered our country the envy and admiration of the people of other lands. It is for the restoration of this invaluable unity that the present war is waged by the American people. Their object is simply to maintain the integrity of the Republic, and bring back the old and glorious state of things. Heavy taxes, vast armies, extraordinary prerogatives, are indispensable to the success of the Government in this enterprise. But whether is it better for the people of the Free States to endure such evils patiently for a season, in order that the Union may be reestablished, or to render these evils eternal by the triumph of the rebels, and by hearkening to the counsel of traitors? If the latter succeed, our national unity will break into fragments, our power and prestige will vanish, and America will become, like Europe, a Continent of rival States, of intriguing Cabinets, of oppressive taxes, hostile armies, and incessant war. Such are the calamities which are in store for us, if we do not uphold the Government in this imminent crisis of the Republic's destiny.

Throwing Aside Party for the Country.

The speeches made at the great Union meeting at Cooper Institute ten days ago seem to be very acceptable to the people everywhere, as they were to the audience that listened to them. Especially do the people commend JOHN VAN BUREN's speech as one recalling the promise of his earlier years. He is not the only one who has found a strange freedom of utterance in speaking on behalf of the country. We all recollect the narrative given by Parson BROWNLOW of his long-standing bronchial troubles, which left him as soon as he began to tell the men of the North of the patriotism and sufferings of the loyal East Tennesseans, and to urge them to similar true-heartedness and devotion. And it has been so everywhere. Among the freest and best speeches made for the National cause, have been those which have come from men who trampled upon party ties in making them.

This is not unnatural. It is not a very uncommon phenomenon. Party ties are powerful, and they will often lead party men to favor policies which in their heart they do not approve of—to support men, who, in their heart, they believe to be dangerous, bad men. When that is so, when any party adopts a course which goes against the conscience, it may be able for a while to enforce the party ties, but there will surely come a reaction and a division. One class—the class in which moral principle is weak—will stifle all the calls of conscience, and as an almost necessary result, proceed more strenuously in the course which their conscience was at first repugnant to. The other class will trample upon party ties, and follow sooner or later the dictates of duty. And wherever this is the case—wherever the man does rise above the influences of evil, and really set himself upon the right course, he will fight more manfully and deal his blows with greater zeal, and with a freedom refreshing to witness.

This effect is all the greater in proportion to the greatness of the cause in question. And in the present case, where the cause of the Union is the cause not only of the national life, but also of the principles of Republican government and of the hopes of the race in its struggles with despotism and oppression, where we are fighting against a rebellion as uncalled-for, so unwarranted, founded upon principles of such treason to humanity, and carried on with such utter disregard of all morality and all civilization—even the civilization which war allows; when a party undertakes here at the North to set itself up to favor that rebellion, and to hinder and damage that cause of the Union, is it any wonder that any one who has a spark of manhood in him should rejoice to rise superior to party ties, and should speak words all the more burning because of the attempted restraint upon him? It takes a pretty mean man to be a Copperhead, and we do not wonder that the rebels, having such men in their mind, should speak of a Union with them as requiring even rebels to "hold their noses a little."

Dr. JOHNSON defined Patriotism as "the last refuge of a scoundrel," and there is a bastard patriotism to which his definition is exactly applicable. None talk more loudly of patriotism than the Copperheads. But true patriotism is a sacred flame, which, when once kindled in the heart, burns out all selfishness and meanness; which strengthens all the nobler powers of the mind; which clarifies the vision and makes the whole man to a nobler life. We rejoice that so many have felt this divine glow of late. We rejoice at each new exhibition of it; and we only hope that it may so spread and increase among us that, before its radiance, the bats and owls may flee in dismay, the Gophers and Copperheads betake themselves to their dens and holes, there to remain buried forever.

THE YAZOO EXPEDITION.—We are yet without fully authenticated news from the Yazoo River. It is quite possible that the telegraphic rumors of the taking of Yazoo City, the destruction of the rebel vessels, and the capture of several thousand rebel troops, may be correct. We know that a strong naval force from Admiral PORTER's squadron, accompanied by a land force, had cut their way through Yazoo Pass, entered and ascended the Coldwater River, and ten days ago had nearly reached the point where the Tallahatchie pours into the Yazoo. When they got to that point, they had fewer national difficulties to encounter than had previously impeded their progress. And if our fleet was able to rush down and make a sudden assault upon the rebel vessels and land force at Yazoo City, it is quite likely that it is true, there were very great dangers attending this expedition, dangers of rebel shore batteries, dangers of torpedoes, dangers of encountering a greater force than was anticipated. Indeed, we were very much in the dark as to what we would meet. But it would be just like our Western Navy, if it had added another heat and splendid victory to its already glorious roll.

THE POWER OF THE GOVERNMENT.—It is a common saying of the Copperheads, that their opposition does not interfere with the exertion of the full power of the Government in putting down the rebellion. Like other Copperhead sayings, this one is untrue. It is untrue, in the first place, because such opposition tends to discourage enlistments. What man is willing to fight under a commander who is not worthy of the fullest confidence and respect? It is untrue in the second place, because such opposition tends to promote desertion. What man seeking a motive to abandon his colors, cannot find it in the Copperhead doctrine that the object of the war has been changed from that which it was when he enlisted? It is untrue in the third place, because such opposition tends to seriously embarrass the financial operations of the Government. Who wants to lend money to a Government when any portion of the citizens thereof propose repudiation? It is untrue in the fourth place, because such opposition creates an impression abroad that the North is not in earnest in defence of the Constitution and laws. What nation can respect a people who do not respect themselves? It is untrue in the fifth place, because such opposition tends to encourage the rebels. Why should not the rebels persevere when they are assured of sympathy at the hands of their nominal opponents? Thus, while the Copperheads pretend that the Government is vested with unconstitutional powers to put down the rebellion, they pursue a course calculated to prevent enlistments, to promote desertion, to depress the Government credit, to invite foreign intervention, and to inspirit the rebels in their resistance. Their opposition is therefore entirely irreconcilable with a period of war like this, and wholly disconnected with any principles of free speech or personal liberty.

The Spirit of the Army.

The following extract from a private letter of a Sergeant in one of the New-York regiments, is a good illustration of the indignation which pervades the rank and file in respect to the treacherous conduct of the Northern Copperheads:

"I suppose you people at the North have lost all confidence in the army, and in the ability of the General Government to suppress this damnable rebellion. I infer such is the case from the despairing tone of some of the loyal journals of the North. Press upon any terms in the cry of many who have been loyal to the Government heretofore, but who, naturally timid and cowardly, have been led on by disloyal men and secession sympathizers, till now their whole cry is peace upon any terms—even to the compromising of the great principle which underlies this bloody contest now going on between Freedom and Slavery.

Copperheads, for mere party purposes, are opposing the Administration in its mighty efforts to crush rebellion with all their 'might, mind and strength.' They are bound the North shall not succeed in its laudable efforts to suppress armed treason. They openly applaud JEFF. DAVIS. They hinder enlistments, stir up disaffection, and in every way try to discourage the soldiers in the field. The rebellion is on its last legs, and its only hope of success is in the efforts of the Copperheads to divide and distract the North. The question of the rebellion thus becomes this: Will the Copperheads—and the rebels but the Copperheads—succeed in dishonoring the Union, and rendering of no avail the blood of one hundred thousand noble patriots who have fallen in this contest?"

The Democracy and the Mayoralty.

The local politicians of the Democracy are already discussing with much zeal the subject of the candidacy of their party for Mayor at the Charter election in next December. From the present aspect of affairs, it is evident that the very earnest feeling and deep interest excited on the question must soon take the definite shape of factious organization for the respective claimants for the nomination. At this time it does not appear that more than two persons are put forward for the honor. These are Mr. C. GODFREY GUNTHER and Alderman F. I. A. BOOTH. Upon the merits of these gentlemen, but more especially upon their respective claims for the nomination, the Democracy are even now waxing warm and factious.

Mr. GUNTHER, it is said by the party leaders, considers his claims paramount, and believes they ought to be beyond rivalry, because, while nothing can be alleged against his character, or his fitness for the high office of Mayor, the party owe him, according to "usage," a second chance of winning by the suffrages of the people—his first race having been gratuitously made, and only unsuccessful in consequence of division in the party. This reasoning is based upon the supposition that Mozart and Tammany will be united on the Mayoralty at the next Charter election, and therefore assumes that these wings of the party having brought about defeat to the Democracy by division at the last election for Mayor, Mr. GUNTHER, by his having received the largest vote of the two Democratic candidates, is entitled to a new nomination, a united support and a "glorious triumph" over the Republican candidate, whoever he may be.

On the other hand, Mr. BOOTH's friends, who numerically appear to be large, set forth his claims as beyond cavil or question. They represent his wonderful success as a politician, his fidelity to friends, his devotion to the party, his extraordinary ability as a manager, his unrivaled power of combination, as shown in the recent contest for the Comptrollership, his magnanimous withdrawal from the field in order to allay all factious feeling and insure success to the party after he had, through a long and heated contest, secured the nomination. Besides all this, they say, "Alderman BOOTH has the prestige of success," that "he has never been defeated," which is a matter of large importance in the eyes of the Democracy. They further insist that the fact of Mr. GUNTHER's defeat would damp the ardor of party feeling, and prevent a full show of strength at the ballot-box, were he again in the field. He had his chance to win and failed. BOOTH, though certain of victory, surrended and his advantage for the benefit of the party, and by so doing made the party his debtor for such honor in the future as his friends might claim for him as a just requital for his magnanimity.

So the dispute stands in breadth, length and depth. It is a dilemma to the minor politicians, who trembingly stood aloof now, wondering which horn of it they must seize hold of bye and bye.

ARTISTS' RECEPTION.—We have space this morning but for a mention of a very charming, and agreeable reception, given on Friday night at Donworth's studio building, by the artists resident in that delightful locality. The usual mass of gay men and women, literary individuals and artistic personages, responded affirmatively to the courteous invitation of the Committee, Messrs. COLMAN, GRAY and HASELTINE, and formed a kaleidoscopic view paralleled only by the meritorious creations of the pencil, which hung silent on the walls. Works by KENSETT, Richards, Coleman, Gray, Haseltine, Carpenter, Lang, Hicks and others, with the never-failing and always good contribution from the humanitarian artist ROSSITER, who is one of the very best of our esthetic teachers who have seized ideas, suggestions or inspirations from the event of the Nineteenth Century, and who have reproduced on canvas or in marble the deeds of the day. A more pleasant gathering has never been attended, and the thanks of the guests are due, as they doubtless are rendered, to the hosts of the evening for the kind hospitality and the mature culture of judgment which marked the entertainment provided.

IMPORTANT FROM PORT ROYAL.

Gen. Hunter on the Point of Making a Forward Movement.

A STIRRING GENERAL ORDER.

The Negroes Drafted into the Service of the United States.

Brig.-Gen. Naglee Ordered North.

An arrival from Port Royal, yesterday, brings intelligence to March 10. Nothing of importance had transpired since the departure of the last steamer; but the following important orders have reached us.

A FORWARD MOVEMENT.

HEADQUARTERS, DEPARTMENT OF THE SOUTH, HILTON HEAD, PORT ROYAL, S. C., March 7, 1863.

GENERAL ORDERS, NO. 16.—SOLDIERS OF THE DEPARTMENT OF THE SOUTH: After long and wearying delays, due to causes over which no one in this Department has control, we have now reached the cheering prospect of active and very important service.

Soldiers of the Tenth Army Corps, you are stimulated by every consideration of honor to vie with the gallant men from the Department of North Carolina, who have been sent by Government to take part with you in the dangers and the glory of operations now pending.

Officers and men of the command, you are adjured to the performance of every duty. All who earn distinction, no matter how humble their positions, have my pledge that their services shall be honorably acknowledged, and the acknowledgment pressed to their advantage.

Commanding Officers of divisions, brigades and regiments in making their reports to these headquarters, will give full details of every action, and a full description of every man who has shown himself worthy of mention for gallantry, or who has by his conduct, or under the influence of his example, contributed to the success of his command; and all who are thus mentioned MAY HOPE that merit shall be taking on the part of the Major-General Commanding to secure their promotion.

Should any officers neglect their men, or evince the least disposition to shrink at any moment from the proper responsibilities of their Commissions, they will be likewise reported and held amenable to the severest penalties denounced by military law for misbehavior in presence of the enemy. Should private soldiers distinguish themselves, while officers become recreant to duty, it would be treason to the country not to compel an exchange of places.

The services of all officers is earnestly called in this crisis of our country. Return Reports for the Month of February will be made to Headquarters of the Army, Department of the South, and Tenth Army Corps, on Board The Canada, on the 15th inst., and the 1st of the entire army of occupation.

By order of Maj.-Gen. D. HUNTER.

GEN. NAGLEE.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE SOUTH, March 5, 1863.

SPECIAL ORDER NO. 127.—Brig.-Gen. HENRY M. NAGLEE having sent a third insubordinate protest, much more objectionable than the first, to these headquarters—his first having been disapproved by the Hon. Secretary of War, who in consequence directed that he be relieved from duty in this department, afterward leaving it (Options with the Commanding General to relieve or retain him—the Commanding General, after very mature reflection, and with a keen sense of his responsibilities to his country, sincerely believes that the harmony of the department, and the best interests of the service, require that Gen. NAGLEE should be relieved from duty. The said Brig.-Gen. HENRY M. NAGLEE is therefore hereby relieved from duty in the Department of the South, and Brig.-Gen. OSEA S. TRAIN will immediately assume command of all the United States forces on St. Helena Island. Brig.-Gen. HENRY M. NAGLEE will proceed to the City of New-York by the first steamer, and report by letter to the Adjutant-General of the army.

By order of Maj.-Gen. DAVID HUNTER,
CHAS. G. HALPINE, Assistant Adjutant-General Tenth Army Corps.

THE NEGROES.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE SOUTH, HILTON HEAD, PORT ROYAL, S. C., March 6, 1863.

GENERAL ORDER NO. 17.—In view of the necessities of the military situation, the impossibility of obtaining from Government all the troops required for service in this Department, and the paramount importance (in view of existing complications of foreign policy) of at once placing strong garrisons of thoroughly acclimated troops in the Southern forts and posts of this Department, in order that the troops now there may be used in the more active field operations for which they are better suited—such forts and posts being peculiarly liable to the ravages of climatic and epidemic diseases—all the able-bodied male negroes between the ages of eighteen and fifty within the military lines of the Department of the South, who are not, on the day of the date of this Order, regularly and permanently employed in the Quartermaster and Commissary Departments, or as the private servants of officers, within the allegiance made by the Army Regulations, are hereby drafted into the Military Service of the United States, to serve as Non-commissioned Officers and Soldiers in the various regiments and brigades now organized, and in process of being organized by Brig.-Gen. RUFUS SAXTON, specially authorized to raise such troops by orders of the War Department.

Until other arrangements can be made, the families of all negroes thus drafted will be provided for by Orders which Gen. SAXTON has authority in case; but it is hoped, and confidently believed, that, in the present scarcity of labor in the Department, few such families will be thrown upon the Government for support.

In the organization of this garrison force, the Major-General Commanding would appeal earnestly to the patriotism and common sense of the officers and men of this command, while asking that every facility be afforded to the raising of these subordinate troops, who will be of service to the country, not merely by such soldierly proficiency as they may themselves attain under the tutelage of white officers, in the performance of garrison duty; but who will also, man for man and regiment for regiment, have the practical effect of doubling the white forces at the command of Government for the more active operations in the field, by releasing an equal number of white men and regiments from the weary and often pestilential, though indispensable, duty of manning the works along the Southern seacoast.

Suddenly released from the vessel restraints of chattel Slavery, and still pursued into freedom by the curse of that ignorance which Slavery fostered as its parent, whenever such an active shield—as the Major-General Commanding believes that the discipline of military life will be the very safest and quickest school in which these enfranchised bondmen can be elevated to the level of our higher intelligence and civilization; and that their enrollment in regular military organizations, and the giving them in this manner a legitimate vent to their natural desire to prove themselves worthy of freedom, cannot fail to have the further usual effect of rendering less likely more servile insurrection, unrestrained by the comities and usages of civilized warfare.

To all officers in the Department who have thoroughly at heart the desire of suppressing as rapidly as possible the cruel evils of civil war, the organization of this garrison force offers an opportunity not to be lost for securing the promotion to commissions of all such non-commissioned officers and privates as they consider deserving. All recommendations for such promotions will be carefully considered at these Headquarters, and in making such recommendations, regimental and company officers will take into serious account the moral character of the parties recommended, assuring themselves that he is one who can bear his sudden promotion without giddiness, and that his subject will be inclined from duty in the Department of the South, and Brig.-Gen. OSEA S. TRAIN will immediately assume command of all the United States forces on St. Helena Island. Brig.-Gen. HENRY M. NAGLEE will proceed to the City of New-York by the first steamer, and report by letter to the Adjutant-General of the army.

By order of Maj.-Gen. DAVID HUNTER,
CHAS. G. HALPINE, Assistant Adjutant-General Tenth Army Corps.

Military Commandant of Philadelphia.

PHILADELPHIA, Friday, March 13.

Gen. MORGANZEY, the Military Commandant of this post, having been ordered to Cairo, Lieut.-Col. [illegible], U. S. A., has assumed command.

NEWS FROM WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, Saturday, March 14.

It was evident that there was not a quorum of Senators present to-day, a number having left Washington during the week for their homes. Many nominations to brevet rank for marked military services which, by a recent law, the President was authorized to confer, were not acted upon.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Before the close of the session there were several confirmations, including the following:

Maj.-Gen. SCOTT, of the Volunteers, to be a Major-General from Nov. 29, instead of Dec. 31, 1862.

Col. LOOMIS, of the Fourth Virginia Volunteers, and Col. JOHN D. STEVENSON, of the Missouri Volunteers, to be Brigadier-Generals.

George F. Shiras, of Pennsylvania, and A. W. Norcross, to be Military Storekeepers.

Lieut.-Col. THOS. C. H. LEARY, First Ohio cavalry, to be a Brigadier-General of Volunteers.

Col. THOS. G. STEVENSON, Twenty-fourth Massachusetts volunteers, to be a Brigadier-General of Volunteers.

Lieut. George L. Selden, on the Reserved List, to be a Commander in the Navy on Reserved List.

Charles R. Sedgwick, of New-York, to be Commissioner to revise and codify the Naval Laws of the United States.

To be Commanders in the Navy—Lieutenant Commander C. Ross Calhoun, Chas. S. Baldwin, Robert W. Shufeldt.

To be Major-Generals—Brig.-Gen. Franz Sigel, United States Volunteers, Nov. 29, 1862; Brig.-Gen. Samuel Heintzelman, United States Volunteers, Nov. 29, 1862.

To be Brigadier-Generals of Volunteers, to rank from date of their respective commissions, unless otherwise specified—Col. R. W. Johnson, Maj.-Gen. Wm. F. Smith.

To be Aids-de-Camp, under Act of July 17, 1862—Capt. Daniel G. Benner, of the Fifteenth Illinois, with rank of Major, for Gen. Hurlbut; Martin K. Cook, of Fourth Illinois Cavalry, with rank of Captain, for Maj.-Gen. Hurlbut.

Benj. F. Rebo, to be Assistant-Quartermaster, with rank of Captain.

Wm. McKee Dunn, of Indiana, Judge-Advocate, with rank of Major, for army under command of Gen. Sumner.

Lieut.-Col. Edmund Schriver, of the Eleventh Regiment Infantry, Inspector-General, with rank of Colonel.

Walter Thomas, appointed for a Principal, by the Senate, was confirmed Yesterday, but a clerical error of a previous vote.

GEN. SUMNER.

The toleration of Gen. SUMNER to active duty occasions much gratification. Government cannot afford to keep officers of his long and tried experience inactive. Gen. SUMNER, owing to his many years service on the frontier, is peculiarly fitted for his new command.

GEN. CASEY.

The confirmation of Gen. CASEY as a Major-General leads his admirers to hope that he will be placed in command of a corps.

REBEL PRISONERS GONE.

Two hundred and eighty rebel prisoners were conveyed from the Old Capitol Prison, to-day, to the steamer State of Maine, which will take them to City Point, under flag of truce, to be exchanged. They were enthusiastically saluted, both at the Old Capitol and at the wharf, by a large number of persons, including women. The rebels were evidently delighted with the salutations they received from their friends. They were escorted by a strong guard.

REFUGEES.

The increased number of refugees who are arriving from the South—being passed through the rebel lines without difficulty—leads to the belief that the Confederate authorities are becoming exercised in regard to the supplies of food, and are consequently anxious to be rid of all such as cannot be made available for military purposes.

A JUDGE NOT CONFIRMED.

ANDREW WYLIE was on Thursday confirmed as one of the Justices of the Supreme Court for the District of Columbia; but for reasons satisfactory to the Senate, the confirmation was reconsidered, and so the appointment fell through.

DEATH OF MR. NOELL.

Hon. JOHN W. NOELL, of Missouri, member of the late House of Representatives, died to-day, after several weeks' illness.

DEAD LETTER OFFICE.

The amount of money taken from letters at the "Dead Letter Office" will, it is estimated, amount to eighty thousand dollars for the present year, being some thirty thousand more than the average for past years. This increase is owing chiefly to the large sums of money being constantly sent home by the soldiers. An additional force of twenty-five or thirty clerks is employed.

HORSE THIEVES IN THE ARMY.

Recent developments lead to the belief that an organized band of horse thieves exists in the army. Large numbers of animals are daily disappearing.

PRESENTATION TO HON. MOSES F. ODELL.

At the anniversary of the Juvenile Missionary Society of the Wesleyan Chapel, corner of Fifth and F streets, last evening, Hon. MOSES F. ODELL, of Brooklyn, was presented with a beautiful photographic album by the children. Mr. ODELL being prevented from being present by illness, Dr. DURBIN, of New-York, received the souvenir on his behalf. Mr. ODELL, who has been so many years identified with the Sabbath Schools of the Methodist denomination in Brooklyn and vicinity, has devoted much time to the juveniles while here.

THE MOQUI ABORIGINES.

The following extract of a letter received by Commissioner DOLE from J. D. DORR, Superintendent of Indian Affairs at Salt Lake City, conveys some interesting information:

"A delegation from the Moquis nation has just visited this Superintendency. Their country is in New-Mexico, south and east of Colorado River, in the vicinity of the San Francisco Mountains. They live in stone houses, and are devoted to agricultural pursuits. They have a tradition that their people formerly lived west of Colorado River. They are called 'White,' or 'Welch' Indians, and I judge by their figures and physiognomy that their ancestors were of the white race. A native of Wales present thinks he discovers a few words of his language in their speech. They examine with much curiosity the various manufactures which they find here; also, the mills and machinery. They have seven towns or villages, and say they have never been visited by white men except Mexicans and Mormons. The delegation is accompanied by a Mormon interpreter, who intends to return with them to their country and remain there."

The same people were visited by the distinguished geologist and explorer, Prof. NEWBERRY, some years ago, who gave a much more reasonable theory of the origin and ethnological relations of this remarkable tribe than the one furnished by the Utah Indian Agent. There is but a small remnant of the tribe left, and Prof. NEWBERRY thought they had belonged to the Aztecs, who ruled that country on its discovery by the Spaniards. Others, however, think, from the characteristics of the melancholy remnant now existing, that they may be referred to the Toltecs, who were displaced by the Aztecs. The ruins of their towns, which were walled, and many of which are 800 or 1,000 years old, extend over the whole Valley of the San Juan, and have apparently belonged to a race once numbering millions of men.

IN HOSPITAL.

Between seven and eight thousand sick and wounded soldiers are in the different hospitals in and about Washington. The Medical Department have about 4,000 vacant beds in the hospitals here.

RESIGNATION.

The resignation of ANDREW WYLIE, as Commonwealth Attorney for the District of Alexandria, has been sent in and accepted.

IMPORTANT MEDICAL ORDER.

SURGEON-GENERAL'S OFFICE, WASHINGTON, March, 9, 1863.

To Surgeon R. O. Abbott, Medical Director, Department of Washington:

SIR: You will take the necessary measures to cause the transfer to general hospitals named to their homes of the sick and wounded soldiers who have been sick for three months and upward, and are in a fit state to bear such transportation.

These transfers to be made in detachments of equal size, under charge of proper officers, and with the attention to the welfare of the sick and wounded thus transferred.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
R. S. SMITH, Surgeon U. S. A.
By order of the Surgeon-General.

EXTRA SESSION OF THE SENATE.

WASHINGTON, Saturday, March 14.

The Senate, soon after reading the journal, went into Executive session, and when the doors opened at 2 o'clock, adjourned sine die.

FROM THE STATE CAPITAL.

The Relief of Sick and Disabled Soldiers—The Proposed Sanitarium Bureau—Health Officer at Quarantine—Mr. Dean's Bill to Prevent Gambling in Gold—State Prisons—The New-Yorkers in Fort McHenry, &c.

From Our Own Correspondent.

ALBANY, Friday, March 13, 1863.

The bill introduced into the Senate by Senator FOLGER, to provide additional means for the relief of sick and disabled soldiers from this State, is one of much importance. The sanitarium character of the object, as expressed in the title, no one, I apprehend, will be disposed to question. But there may be a difference of opinion on some of the details of the bill, especially those that provide for the appointment of a corps of surgeons by the Governor, who shall be provided with ambulances, stretchers, and other hospital and field equipments.

The armies now in the field have the most extensive surgical and Medical Staff, and the most complete equipment the armies of any country ever had. And the facts prove that on the whole our sick and wounded soldiers are cared for better, and that the mortality is less than in any other country. It is a military establishment, and necessarily and exclusively under the direction of the Surgeon-General, to whom all subordinates report directly. The General Government furnishes not only all the medicines, but ambulances and other equipments. There is no call or necessity for an expenditure on the part of the State of a single cent for these; and the corps of surgeons proposed to be appointed by the Governor, for whom there does not appear to be a demand, would necessarily come under the direction of the Surgeon-General, and be subject to the discipline and regulations of that Department, just as much as a regiment of soldiers, which, for the assistance of those now in the field, the Governor might be empowered to send out. I fancy it will be found just as impracticable to organize a State Surgical and Medical Department in the field, as it would to organize a State army, independent of the General Government and its officers.

There can be but one system. Whatever may volunteer, whatever the State may devise, must be subordinate to the General Government.

Whoever knows anything about the matter, knows that the maintenance of field and hospital appointments, especially medicines and ambulances, entails a vast expense. If ambulances, there must be horses; if horses, drivers. If the General Government were incapable or indifferent, there might be some reason why the State should think of supplying the deficiency; but when there is no deficiency—when the General Government is doing everything with such lavishness—a proposition like the one now before the Senate must proceed either from an inadequate understanding of the subject, or there must be reasons that do not attach to its merits. The scheme is not only impracticable, but if seriously undertaken, would prove the source of untold difficulty and expense to the State.

The Statistical Bureau bill passed the Committee of the Whole, in the House, last evening, without opposition. The Chief of this Bureau is appointed under the Militia law, and will report to the Adjutant-General. Col. L. L. Dorr is the present incumbent and is admirably fitted for the position. He has already done much and laid the foundations for the great work imposed. Not only most suitable materials for history, but data bearing on questions that will arise under the Conscription law, touching pensions, bounties, quotas, &c., will be collected and preserved.

It is rumored that Gov. SEYMOUR will shortly nominate to the Senate the successor of Dr. GUNN, as Health Officer at Quarantine; and coupled with this is another rumor that Dr. SWINBURNE, of this city, will be the individual. Dr. S., though hitherto not a political supporter of the Governor or his party, is said to be brought forward under circumstances which will render him acceptable to the Governor, and secure his confirmation by the Senate. A Democrat of the old stock, it is probable, would not be confirmed by the Senate. In these days of new alliances, it would not be singular should the Governor be able to find one who was not only eminently fit to hold the office, as is Dr. SWINBURNE, but would satisfy all the requirements of a political character, as well with the Governor as a constitutional majority in the Senate.

Mr. P. H. FIELD, from the Committee on Banks, in the House, this morning, reported Mr. DEAN's bill, heretofore mentioned, to prevent gambling in gold. It was taken from its usual order, and referred to the first Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ANDREWS reported from the Committee of Ways and Means a bill providing that there shall be collected and paid upon all salt manufactured in this State a duty of two cents on every bushel of fifty-six pounds.

Also a bill declaring that "all persons, citizens of this State, are declared to be entitled to equal participation in the distribution of the lime and salt water obtained at the Onondaga Salt Springs, and no preference shall henceforth be made by the Superintendent of said Springs in making such distribution."

It will be seen that these bills mean the throwing open the business of manufacturing salt, and an increase of the State duty one per cent.

The Committee on State Prisons in the Assembly have reported a bill to increase the salaries of the officers in the State Prisons. The agents' salaries are increased from $1,000 to $1,500; the clerks' slightly increased; the keepers' increased from $450 to $60 per month, and the guards' from $40 to $50 per month. The reason alleged for this increase is the high price of living, &c. Messrs. ROBINSON and BROWN, the Republican members of the Committee, presented a minority report totally differing with the majority report, and inflexibly opposed to the increase of salaries, believing the officers sufficiently well paid, and their positions in demand by a greedy horde of applicants.

The Committee to communicate with the President desired instructions to communicate in person. The House, after debate, discharged the Committee and referred the matter to the Governor, on the motion of T. C. FIELDS. This is not what the Committee wanted or expected, and the action of the House caused a good deal of laughing.

I have not the least doubt that a single letter will be enough to ascertain the facts in the case. When ascertained, I think it will be found that the men detained so long in Fort McHenry were among those who assisted the celebrated "French Lady" in capturing a United States steamer on Chesapeake Bay; that they seized the officers of the steamer, held and bound them, and assisted in handing the boat, with all on board, over to the rebels; that they were subsequently released, and when the their return from Richmond fell into the hands of the Federal authorities. I say I am under the impression that these will be found to be the main facts. Possibly I am wrong in this. It is proper to state that the facts, as recited in the communication to which the House acted, do not lead to the inference.

Senator MESSER's general "Dummy bill" gives authority to the railroad companies of the State to substitute "dummies" for locomotives on horses, with the consent of Common Councils of cities and Trustees of villages. We understand that this bill is the exponent of a general belief, that the economy of operating the "dummy," compared with the use of locomotives on horses, will induce a system of subsidiary railroads, which can be substituted even in many of the villages of this State. Already there are many of such bills under consideration, which will pass.

Mr. LOVEJOY gives notice of a very novel bill, to [illegible]

[illegible] Yorkers in Fort McHenry, &c., &c.

I say I am under the impression that these will be found to be the main facts. Possibly I am wrong in this. It is proper to state that the facts, as recited in the communication to which the House acted, do not lead to the inference.

Senator MESSER's general "Dummy bill" gives authority to the railroad companies of the State to substitute "dummies" for locomotives or horses, with the consent of Common Councils of cities and Trustees of villages. We understand that this bill is the exponent of a general belief, that the economy of operating the "dummy," compared with the use of locomotives or horses, will induce a system of subsidiary railroads, which can be substituted even in many of the villages of this State. Already there are many of such bills under consideration, which will pass.

[illegible] Fifth and F streets, last evening, Hon. MOSES F. ODELL, of Brooklyn, was presented with a beautiful photographic album by the children. Mr. ODELL being prevented from being present by illness, Dr. DURBIN, of New-York, received the souvenir on his behalf. Mr. ODELL, who has been so many years identified with the Sabbath Schools of the Methodist denomination in Brooklyn and vicinity, has devoted much time to the juveniles while here.

THE MOQUI ABORIGINES.

The following extract of a letter received by Commissioner DOLE from J. D. DORR, Superintendent of Indian Affairs at Salt Lake City, conveys some interesting information:

"A delegation from the Moquis nation has just visited this Superintendency. Their country is in New-Mexico, south and east of Colorado River, in the vicinity of the San Francisco Mountains. They live in stone houses, and are devoted to agricultural pursuits. They have a tradition that their people formerly lived west of Colorado River. They are called 'White,' or 'Welch' Indians, and I judge by their figures and physiognomy that their ancestors were of the white race. A native of Wales present thinks he discovers a few words of his language in their speech. They examine with much curiosity the various manufactures which they find here; also, the mills and machinery. They have seven towns or villages, and say they have never been visited by white men except Mexicans and Mormons. The delegation is accompanied by a Mormon interpreter, who intends to return with them to their country and remain there."

The same people were visited by the distinguished geologist and explorer, Prof. NEWBERRY, some years ago, who gave a much more reasonable theory of the origin and ethnological relations of this remarkable tribe than the one furnished by the Utah Indian Agent. There is but a small remnant of the tribe left, and Prof. NEWBERRY thought they had belonged to the Aztecs, who ruled that country on its discovery by the Spaniards. Others, however, think, from the characteristics of the melancholy remnant now existing, that they may be referred to the Toltecs, who were displaced by the Aztecs. The ruins of their towns, which were walled, and many of which are 800 or 1,000 years old, extend over the whole Valley of the San Juan, and have apparently belonged to a race once numbering millions of men.

FROM THE STATE CAPITAL.

The Relief of Sick and Disabled Soldiers—The Proposed Sanitarium Bureau—Health Officer at Quarantine—Mr. Dean's Bill to Prevent Gambling in Gold—State Prisons—The New-Yorkers in Fort McHenry, &c.

From Our Own Correspondent.

ALBANY, Friday, March 13, 1863.

The bill introduced into the Senate by Senator FOLGER, to provide additional means for the relief of sick and disabled soldiers from this State, is one of much importance. The sanitarium character of the object, as expressed in the title, no one, I apprehend, will be disposed to question. But there may be a difference of opinion on some of the details of the bill, especially those that provide for the appointment of a corps of surgeons by the Governor, who shall be provided with ambulances, stretchers, and other hospital and field equipments.

The armies now in the field have the most extensive Surgical and Medical Staff, and the most complete equipment the armies of any country ever had. And the facts prove that on the whole our sick and wounded soldiers are cared for better, and that the mortality is less than in any other country. It is a military establishment, and necessarily and exclusively under the direction of the Surgeon-General, to whom all subordinates report directly. The General Government furnishes not only all the medicines, but ambulances and other equipments. There is no call or necessity for an expenditure on the part of the State of a single cent for these; and the corps of surgeons proposed to be appointed by the Governor, for whom there does not appear to be a demand, would necessarily come under the direction of the Surgeon-General, and be subject to the discipline and regulations of that Department, just as much as a regiment of soldiers, which, for the assistance of those now in the field, the Governor might be empowered to send out. I fancy it will be found just as impracticable to organize a State Surgical and Medical Department in the field, as it would to organize a State army, independent of the General Government and its officers.

There can be but one system. Whatever may volunteer, whatever the State may devise, must be subordinate to the General Government.

Whoever knows anything about the matter, knows that the maintenance of field and hospital appointments, especially medicines and ambulances, entails a vast expense. If ambulances, there must be horses; if horses, drivers. If the General Government were incapable or indifferent, there might be some reason why the State should think of supplying the deficiency; but when there is no deficiency—when the General Government is doing everything with such lavishness—a proposition like the one now before the Senate must proceed either from an inadequate understanding of the subject, or there must be reasons that do not attach to its merits. The scheme is not only impracticable, but if seriously undertaken, would prove the source of untold difficulty and expense to the State.

The Statistical Bureau bill passed the Committee of the Whole, in the House, last evening, without opposition. The Chief of this Bureau is appointed under the Militia law, and will report to the Adjutant-General. Col. L. L. Dorr is the present incumbent and is admirably fitted for the position. He has already done much and laid the foundations for the great work imposed. Not only most suitable materials for history, but data bearing on questions that will arise under the Conscription law, touching pensions, bounties, quotas, &c., will be collected and preserved.

It is rumored that Gov. SEYMOUR will shortly nominate to the Senate the successor of Dr. GUNN, as Health Officer at Quarantine; and coupled with this is another rumor that Dr. SWINBURNE, of this city, will be the individual. Dr. S., though hitherto not a political supporter of the Governor or his party, is said to be brought forward under circumstances which will render him acceptable to the Governor, and secure his confirmation by the Senate. A Democrat of the old stock, it is probable, would not be confirmed by the Senate. In these days of new alliances, it would not be singular should the Governor be able to find one who was not only eminently fit to hold the office, as is Dr. SWINBURNE, but would satisfy all the requirements of a political character, as well with the Governor as a constitutional majority in the Senate.

Mr. P. H. FIELD, from the Committee on Banks, in the House, this morning, reported Mr. DEAN's bill, heretofore mentioned, to prevent gambling in gold. It was taken from its usual order, and referred to the first Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ANDREWS reported from the Committee of Ways and Means a bill providing that there shall be collected and paid upon all salt manufactured in this State a duty of two cents on every bushel of fifty-six pounds.

Also a bill declaring that "all persons, citizens of this State, are declared to be entitled to equal participation in the distribution of the lime and salt water obtained at the Onondaga Salt Springs, and no preference shall henceforth be made by the Superintendent of said Springs in making such distribution."

It will be seen that these bills mean the throwing open the business of manufacturing salt, and an increase of the State duty one per cent.

The Committee on State Prisons in the Assembly have reported a bill to increase the salaries of the officers in the State Prisons. The agents' salaries are increased from $1,000 to $1,500; the clerks' slightly increased; the keepers' increased from $450 to $60 per month, and the guards' from $40 to $50 per month.

LOCAL INTELLIGENCE.

A Brutal Husband in Mott-street. INCURABLE PROPENSITY OF THE VICTIM.

A shocking case of wife-beating in Mott-street was reported to light yesterday by Coroner Wilson, of the Fourteenth Ward, in the case of the husband of Fanny Gannon, who, with his wife, Ann Gannon, and a child between eight and nine years of age, and two other children, resided at No. 219 Mott-street. The son was the only eye-witness to the occurrence in question upon the stand, and the story with his testimony by giving the substance of his testimony as it was given at upon the inquest.

James Gannon, testified that he is between eight and nine years of age; that he is a son of the deceased woman, and resides at No. 219 Mott-street; his father's name is Peter Gannon; about eight o'clock on Friday evening last, his father came home; the latter immediately commenced to kick his mother, who was doing nothing to him at the time; he kicked the mother on the head, breast, stomach, through the kitchen; she then got up and went into a corner of the room; there he followed and kicked her again; soon afterward she asked her son for a pail, which he complied; she then sat down upon it; witness saw blood flow from her; she was in a rocking-chair and took his mother's head in his lap; she seemed to be very sick; the blood got worse; she asked witness to go for her father; witness went to the grandmother at No. 103 Mott-street, whom he told that his mother was dying. The father kicked the mother twice; once in the back, and once in the abdomen. A brother of the deceased came afterward came, and when he saw how she was, he went for a policeman to arrest the father. While he was gone for an officer the father twice asked the child for his wife, who was then after milk, and he said he would kick his mother. When prisoner was taken to the Station-house, he pinched witness on the hand, and told him not to tell anything about it. Witness further testified that his father had frequently beaten his mother, sometimes with a stick, sometimes with his hands, and sometimes he would kick her; at one time he beat her with a bench upon her head. The father was in the habit of drinking very much, but the mother did not drink at all.

Several other witnesses, one of whom was the brother of deceased, testified that the prisoner was intemperate, and in the habit of beating his wife in a most brutal manner when in a state of intoxication. All of the witnesses agreed in saying that the deceased was a sober and industrious woman. The latter died in about an hour after the assault was made upon her by her husband. Dr. Bogert made a post-mortem examination of the body, and gave it as his opinion that death resulted from the injuries above described.

At the conclusion of the testimony, the jury rendered the following verdict: "That Ann Gannon, Ann Gannon, came to her death from extravasation from hemorrhage, the result of violence inflicted upon her by her husband, Peter Gannon, on the 13th day of March, 1863." Upon the rendition of this verdict, the Coroner committed the accused to await the action of the Grand Jury.

A Hint for the Philharmonic Society.

NEW-YORK, Saturday, Feb. 28, 1863.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

I should be glad if, by your kind permission, I were allowed to make a suggestion through your column to the Directors of the Philharmonic Society. I am only led to write to you by the conviction which I hold that the performances at their concerts are an important instrument in the higher education of those who are so fortunate as to be able to attend them. This is the end, no doubt, which the Directors have in view; but it seems to me that they would more completely secure it, if the suggestion I crave the privilege of making were adopted. I would respectfully urge upon them that, at the first of the three rehearsals for the coming concert, the audience should be informed what is the name of each piece performed; and that they should at the same time be told what was the conception or course of feeling to which the author in his work sought to give musical expression. It may, perhaps, be urged, in opposition to my proposal, in the first place, that they are unnecessary. But it appears to me that the Directors must not expect from their audience a greater amount of musical science than is possessed by the average young lady or gentleman who is endowed by nature with a correct ear and a taste for music, and has had these improved by the ordinary amount of piano instruction. For such persons, who undoubtedly constitute the bulk of the audience, hearing an elaborate symphony four times performed is not of itself enough to enable them to comprehend it adequately. But if they had set before them at the first performance, in a few words, the general scheme and purpose of the work, they would start, as it were, facing the right way, and their curiosity would be stimulated to learn, by close attention, by what art the composer sought to enforce his conception; and each subsequent performance of the same work would render their insight clearer and more intelligent.

It may be said, in the second place, that it is impossible to find any words which can translate the meaning of a large musical composition. I am, of course, aware that this would be a valid objection if an adequate verbal representation of it were demanded. But none I ask for is something much less than this. I cannot be satisfied with a few hints as to the purpose of the composer, such as those given in Schindler's life of Beethoven, where the writer discusses the purport of some of the sonatas. The directors have, however, at their disposal, gifted as they are, the means of giving to the audience, at the first rehearsal of the three pieces performed, viz., the overture "Tell" and the overture "Fra Diavolo," in the same thing were done for each week of the first rehearsal, I think the directors would find their reward in an obvious increase of interest on the part of the audience. What I wish for might be done by a few words on a printed slip of paper, or perhaps better, by one or two introductory remarks made easily by the eminent conductor. It is to me quite incredible that he would not find it in his power to impart to me and others the outlines of his own evidently present appreciation of the scope of the works he so ably interprets.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant, E. D. M.

GENERAL CITY NEWS.

FATAL BURNING ACCIDENT.—At about 10 o'clock on Friday night, a fatal burning accident occurred at the house of Mr. REMSEN, No. 187 Avenue D, whereby a domestic lost her life and an infant was so severely burned that it is thought it cannot recover. It appears that Mr. and Mrs. REMSEN had gone out to spend the evening, leaving the children in charge of FRANCIS KOCH, a German servant, aged 25 years. The children, while playing, ran against a table upon which stood a lighted kerosene oil lamp. The table was overturned, the lamp broken and the contents scattered in every direction. The clothes of the domestic caught fire while she was endeavoring to save the children. The infant, which she held in her arms when the accident occurred, she threw upon a bed in the room and ran up two flights of stairs to alarm the neighbors, she, at the time, being completely enveloped in flames. She was met on the second landing by one of the occupants of the house who threw his overcoat around her and did all he could to extinguish the flames, but the poor girl was so badly burned that she died soon afterwards. The Coroner was notified and will hold an inquest upon the body to-day.

MELANCHOLY SUICIDE OF A WIFE.—A sad case of suicide was brought before Coroner NEDMAN for investigation, Friday afternoon, at No. 457 Fourth-street. BROOKLYN NEWS.

PROBABLE SUICIDE.—Coroner BARRETT held an inquest on Friday, at No. 314 Grand-street, E. D., on the body of a German, named ANDREAS DACHNE, who is supposed to have committed suicide the evening previous, by shooting himself. From the testimony it appears that deceased had had trouble with his wife, and had threatened, in the presence of several persons, to destroy his life. Mrs. DACHNE, having reason to suppose that he was about to make the attempt, ran out to procure the presence of a neighbor, and shortly after the report of fire-arms was heard. Upon going in Dachne was found lying upon the floor, where he died almost immediately. He was shot through the head, the ball passing between the lungs and severing an artery. The pistol was found lying on the floor.

LAW REPORTS.

The Death Penalty Under the Law of 1862—Dissenting Opinion of Justice Ingraham in the Lowenberg Case.

SUPREME COURT—GENERAL TERM.

Before Justices Ingraham, Peckham and Leonard.

Moses Lowenberg, Plaintiff in Error vs. The People, Defendants in Error.—The opinion of the Court, in this case, was given in the Times of yesterday. The following is the dissenting opinion of Presiding Justice INGRAHAM:

INGRAHAM, P. J. (Dissenting).—The prisoner was tried and convicted in the Court of General Sessions of the crime of murder in the first degree, and was sentenced to imprisonment and death.

The murder was committed on the 19th of November, 1861. The trial took place on the 11th of December, 1861, and the prisoner was sentenced on the 6th of January, 1862, in the fourth week after the commencement of the December Term. The Court had been extended for the trial of another case, and during the week for which it was so extended the sentence took place.

The great question we are called upon to decide in this case arises upon the construction of the act passed in 1860 in relation to capital punishment, and to provide for the more certain punishment of the crime of murder. (Laws of 1860, chap. 410.)

Prior to the passage of this act, the law for the punishment of murder was contained in the R. S., 2d vol., p. 663.

The first section of this Statute was simple and easily understood, and provided that every person who should thereafter be convicted of treason, of murder, or of arson in the first degree, should suffer death for the same. The same also provided for the mode of execution, and the time within which it should take place.

By the act of 1860, the first section of the chapter of the Revised Statutes above referred to was amended so as to read as follows:

"Every person who shall hereafter be convicted of—first, Treason against the State; or, second, of murder; or, third, of arson in the first degree—those crimes are declared in this title—shall be punished as herein provided."

The effect of this amendment was to abolish the section of the Revised Statutes as it existed at the time of the passage of the act of 1860, and to substitute in its place the section as adopted in that act.

It was thus enacted by the 1st section of the act, that of the Revised Statutes, as amended, that the crimes of murder should be punished as provided in the following section, which, in lieu of the section, provided, "Every person who shall be convicted of murder, shall suffer death by hanging, at such place within this State, and at such time within twenty days, as the Court before which the conviction shall be had, shall direct."

But, as it is contended, only the supposition that nothing was to be left in the statute authorizing the punishment of death for murder, under the repeal of that act; the law of 1860 also repealed the section fixing the time for executing such punishment, the provisions for submitting the case to the Governor for revision, before execution, the provisions for reviews in certain cases for females, the mode of the execution by hanging, the place of the execution, the prison-yard, and the provision for another place of execution, in case the prison of the county was not convenient.

We cannot, in the face of these provisions, [illegible] the act of 1860 to be punished as therein provided, the only portion of the chapter that contained any punishment had been taken away, and every portion of the chapter that contained anything relating to the punishment of death was utterly repealed.

We look in vain, therefore, throughout this title of the Revised Statutes for any punishment prescribed for the crime of murder, and unless some other provision is made in another statute, no such punishment can be found in the laws of this State as they existed at the time of this offence.

In the act of 1860, there is no punishment expressly provided for murder in the first degree.

The first section enacts that no other crime than treason and murder in the first degree shall be punished with death. This is a provision for limiting the punishment of other offences, not providing punishment for the excepted cases, and while the statute provides a punishment for murder in the second degree, for arson, and other offences, it leaves the punishment for the greater offences not only undefined, but if once can be discovered at all from the act, to rest on inferences merely to be drawn from the negative provisions of the first section.

It cannot be denied that at the time of the commission of this offence there was no provision of law directly prescribing the punishment of death for treason or murder in the first degree or directing any punishment whatever, and if the Court directs the execution of the prisoner, or the Sheriff carries out such direction, the Court and Sheriff must act, in taking the life of a human being, without any direct authority of law, and upon a mere inference to be drawn from a negative provision of a statute, and from the absence of any law providing any other punishment. When a public officer is called upon to take the life of another, he may well ask that his duty should be clearly laid down by the law; that such acts should not rest on mere inference or implication, but that he should have his warrant for what he does in the clear provisions of the statute and the mandate of the Court. To take away the life of a prisoner under a doubtful construction of the law, or on a mere inference or implied authority from the absence of legislative provisions, might lead to a judicial murder rather than to carrying into effect the law of the land.

It is very clear that the Legislature did not intend that all the offences enumerated in the first section of the title in the Revised Statutes, above referred to, should be punished with death. In that section was included the offence of arson in the first degree, and not even by inference can any authority be found for a greater punishment for this offence than imprisonment at hard labor in the State Prison. In the General Term of this District held in the case of Shepherd, and in that case the Court of Appeals have since held that under the act of 1860 he could not be sentenced to any punishment. Whether such was the intent of the author of the act of 1860 in regard to the crime of murder, is a question not free from difficulty. The omission to provide by direct enactment any punishment for the highest crime known to the law, treason and murder, by a positive repeal of every provision of the R. S., bearing upon the death penalty or relating thereto, especially the absolute repeal of the section providing the mode of execution by hanging, without substituting any other direction as to the mode by which death was to be inflicted, do not make the duty of the Court clear or free from doubt so as to warrant us in saying that the Legislature clearly intended to retain the punishment of death for this offence.

I propose now to examine the cases decided in the Court of Appeals in which the act of 1860 has been the subject of discussion. These are The People vs. Hartung, 22 N. Y. Rep. 95, and The People vs. Young, 23 N. Y. Rep. 312.

It must be remembered that these cases were for offences committed before the passage of the act of 1860, and the question involved in these cases was [illegible] the act of 1860 [illegible] the repeal of the act of 1860 [illegible] punishment of the offence [illegible] was no milling around the collar-way, as required by the ordinances of the City, occasioned by the negligence of the defendant, Laird, in not erecting the same, and the negligence of the Corporation in not causing the ordinances of the City to be complied with in that respect; and that on the night of the 4th of the same month—three days after—while putting up the blinds to his store, in consequence of the absence of the railing, he was precipitated into the cellar-way, seriously injuring him. It was alleged that defect had been twice made upon the Comptroller in the matter, but that that officer had refused any compensation for the injuries. Hence the action.

The defendant, Laird, denied that the plaintiff was his tenant, alleging that another party was the lessee, and that such party, by the terms of the lease, was to have all such repairs made at his own expense. He also denied knowledge of any defect in the sidewalk. The City denied all knowledge of the manner stated in the complaint and also denied the defect alleged upon the sidewalk, and also denied that the injury was owing to whatever the milling or grating, if attempt in the complaint, for the purpose therein mentioned.

The complaint was dismissed.

John Burt for plaintiff; J. K. Hackett for defendants the Corporation, Carpenter & Beach for defendant Laird.

The Col. Lennis Habeas Corpus.

Before the City Judge at Chambers.

This noted case was brought to a close this day, the young man, Maturin, being brought up in obedience to the new writ of habeas corpus, obtained by Mr. Wm. F. Howe against the Colonel.

Mr. Glassey appeared for the United States Government, and claimed the recruit as a deserter from the One Hundred and Seventy-fourth Regiment N. Y. S. V., alleging that he had received the bounty and uniform, and that having represented himself of age, he should be held.

Mr. Howe produced evidence proving that the recruit was now under 21; and submitted, that enlistment without the consent of the parents, the recruit was never "legally," and therefore could not be a deserter, but was, on the contrary, entitled to his discharge.

Judge McCunn said, that upon the testimony and the concession of his previous decisions and those of Judges of the Supreme Court, Mr. Howe's objection was fatal; that he therefore directed that the recruit be discharged.

RAILROAD BONDS FOR SALE.—THE UNdersigned, Trustees of the Dubuque and Sioux City Railroad Company, will receive proposals up to the 17th day of March next, for the sale of any part of Three Hundred Thousand Dollars First Mortgage Seven Per Cent. Twenty-Year Bonds, dated Jan. 1, 1863, secured on the First Division of the Dubuque and Sioux City Railroad, consisting of one hundred miles from Dubuque to Cedar Falls, and intended to pay for the purpose of discharging the floating debt of the Company, and will be its only indebtedness, and the first mortgage lien upon one hundred miles of railroad, completed and in operation. The gross earnings of the road for the year 1862 and the net earnings were $124,174, with a certain prospect of a largely increasing business. It will, therefore, be seen, that the net earnings are five times as much as will pay the interest, while the amount of Bonds to be issued is only three thousand dollars per mile on a road which has cost $8,000 per mile, and which has never been over ten per cent. Bond is offered in the United States. No bid will be received for less than par. Payment to be made in United States Treasury notes, "Legal Tender," or Bank notes current in the City of New-York. The Trustees will be ready for delivery on the 15th March. Bids to be addressed to the undersigned, care of John Isard, No. 12 Broad-st., New-York, of whom further information can be obtained. THE UNION LEAGUE.

as most of us do, that I had driven him to the wall, for I had pressed him so hard. At last he exclaimed, "To be serious about this thing, Mr. Jenkins, a large majority of the people of Georgia are not prepared to submit to the Administration of any man coming up from the ranks of the people as AMBROSE LINCOLN has." I thought I saw through the whole thing then, I thought I understood them, that they had become tired of free Government and had become fearful of trusting the institutions of this Government to the great mass of the people and that the time had come at which they would change it. Well, I am free to say this, that I am opposed to an aristocracy. I am for this Government as it is, and if it requires alteration let it be amended according to the Constitution of the United States. (Applause.) I am opposed to an aristocracy of money, or banks, of railroads, or monopolies of any kind. I am opposed to a sort of Brazilian aristocracy resting upon decayed family reputation. While I say this, though it may seem somewhat paradoxical, I am in favor of an aristocracy—yes, I am. I am in favor of an aristocracy of virtue, of talent, of intelligence, of merit, of worth. (Applause.) I am in favor of an aristocracy of labor. (Applause.) That which elevates the great mass of mankind is the aristocracy I am in favor of. (Applause.) Let each and every man, without regard to antecedents rise and stand upon his own intrinsic worth and merit. (Applause.) And whether Mr. LINCOLN came from the cabin or castle it mattered not with me, the question was whether he came according to the form of law? (Applause.) And to show will further this pretext, don't we know and don't we see from the South having it in the power to adopt all these propositions, that it was a mere pretext, and that they wanted to avail themselves of a favorable occasion? What was it that LINCOLN could do after he came in that would be injurious to the South? Had not we a majority of six in the Senate? What could Mr. LINCOLN have done? and did not I tell gentlemen so upon the floor—"Stay, and if you think you have wrongs—if the South have been trampled upon, stay and let us fight the battle inside of the Constitution and not in violation of it. (Applause.) And if any attempts are made or measures adopted inimical to the truth, we have the power in our hands." What was it that Mr. LINCOLN could have done that we could not have arrested—he came into power with his hands crossed; he could not make his Cabinet unless we wanted it. We could have rejected every nomination he sent in there. Why did not we stay there and do it, if there was any wrong? Why did we go out, and try to break up the Government? It shows that we wanted to break up the Government. I say "we." I don't believe in that party—(laughter)—but the South; he could not send a Minister abroad, unless it was confirmed by our consent. Where, then, was the danger? And if he send one abroad, and he made a treaty that was inimical and unfriendly to our institutions, it could not become a treaty of the land unless adopted by two-thirds of the Senate. Where then was the danger? He could not even send a Consul, he could not draw his $25,000 to furnish his house, and buy his meat and bread, unless we appropriated it. Where was the great danger, then, of Lincoln's coming into power? But it showed that we were acting the hypocrite, that we were playing false to the country and violating the Constitution we had been sworn to support. (Applause.) But they became satisfied that even if Mr. LINCOLN was turned out in four years the prospects of JEFF. DAVIS and BOB TOOMBS and JACK SLIDELL for greatness in this country, were dwindling and diminishing in the distance. (Applause.) that there were others coming up who were making their mark in the hearts and affections of the great mass of the people, and that after Mr. LINCOLN went out they were to be excluded—hence we were trying to destroy the Government and to set up a Southern aristocracy. Now, in connection with what has been said on this subject of negroes I am a Southern man. I have owned slaves, and when this infernal, this nefarious, this diabolical, this hell-born and hell-hound rebellion broke out (Applause.) I owned ten negroes that would sell for as much money as any other ten that will be found within the limits of that State; but, by way of scourging to me, my peculiar Southern rights, they took them and appropriating them to their own use, (laughter,) and my wife and children were turned into the street, and the house and lot and other property, the result of the industry of my own hands, was converted into barracks and hospitals for butternuts. This is the way they give rights, and I don't think they ought to have much right to complain. But in connection with what has been said, let me say to you that my Democracy was learned in the school of JEFFERSON and JACKSON. THOMAS JEFFERSON believed that traitors ought to be hung, and tried to hang one BURR, and JACKSON, one CALHOUN, and I am for punishing traitorous men who are enemies to this Government. I care not for banks or tariffs whatever, or Slavery. If they are in the way of the car of State, they must get out of the way. (Applause.) Hence I am for the Constitution and the law, and if Slavery is in the way, it must get out. I am for the Government, as it was given to us by our forefathers, with Slavery, or without Slavery. (Applause.) If all else must be sacrificed, I say let it be done, but preserve this Government. What is anything worth without it? Because we could begin anew with these same principles, and in a short time rebuild ourselves, and march with the nations of the earth. I say that rather than have the Government destroyed, I would send every African back to his native land, and even to let Africa itself float off from the rest of the world, and let it shift beyond the point of gravitation, rather than this Government should sink. It is very easy to find fault with those in authority, but it seems to me our duty is first to save the country, and then talk about parties. Let me ask compromisers a question. Suppose the rebellion succeeds, what use have they got for you? They are sure only to treat you with contempt. Suppose our own Government puts down this rebellion—and it will do it—where will you go then? [Laughter.] I would ask in good faith, what will be done with Southern Unionists if you settle by compromise? I come back by the Constitution and ask for a Republican form of Government for them. I want to know if the thousands of Union men who fled from the tyranny of the rebels are to be consigned to the charitable hands of Southern traitors? Shall they be neglected by this Government? Is this their reward for loyalty? Unfurl your Stars and Stripes, and give them the chance to show their devotion to the flag. Women now are insulted, children murdered, fathers and sons chased and hunted in the woods by red Indians, who cut off their ears and show them as trophies. What response is there to their groans? None whatever; and yet you talk about compromise. Their condition is fearful; their loyalty is unimpeachable where it requires courage to be loyal. When I see them, as I often do, I feel like exclaiming:

"Breathes there a man with soul so dead
Who never to himself hath said,
This is my own, my native land." [Applause.]

Oh, I want you to help them. I can hear their cries, see their tears, and almost feel their pains and appreciate their sufferings. I hear the cries of pain; their blood cries from the longest caverns of the earth to the Nation and the Constitution for aid. Will it be withheld? Are you men? Are you freemen? Have you homes, and wives and children, or nature in you? If so, I know their appeal will not be in vain. [Applause.] And the time will come when you will send more to redeem them from slavery. Here, where everything goes on finely, you scarcely realize what is going on there. You have prosperity and comfort. There is the track of war, consumed dwellings and new made graves, with no stones. Look at the men and officers who have fallen, and will you now retreat ingloriously. Will you let these brave men sleep beneath the rebel flag? Are you prepared to let the grave of WASHINGTON sleep within the confines of treachery? Or of JEFFERSON, or of JACKSON within their borders. If I thought so, there would be some rising Peter in your midst who would raise another crusade that the graves and bones of these men may be redeemed. Compromise? Compromise over the ruins of your Constitution, over the Stars and Stripes! He who will do it is prepared to turn and take the other side and batter the Government down itself. No compromise until the Stars and Stripes are placed in the capital of every State of this Confederacy. [Applause.] Let the last life be lost, the last dollar spent, and the last drop of blood be spilled, but do not let us compromise. Let us go forward and pour out our blood as the last libation upon Freedom's altar. Let our men and officers take the Stars and Stripes and meet our enemies, and if need be, let it be baptized in fire from the gun and the heart's blood of the nation; but our Government must stand. The word compromise should be stricken from our vocabulary, and have no farther existence till this rebellion is crushed. I cannot close without thanking the tenderer portion of this audience, who have honored us with their presence here, to-night. [Applause.] At the South the ladies have been the animating spirit of the rebellion. When woman unsexes herself, she is prepared to do most anything, and at the South they have almost ceased to be women. But if their influence is so potent on the wrong side, how great it will be if exerted on the right. Hence I appeal to the ladies to use their influence in conversation and otherwise in favor of the Union. Your influence is very great, and she is the power behind the throne, greater than the throne itself. She can by whispering in his ear certain facts, and a hesitating husband would daily no longer, but shoulder to his duty. She should rather be a soldier's widow than a coward's wife. [Applause.] And we would say to younger ladies that fondly adore those who wear stand by their country won't stand by their wives. [Applause.] I was glad to hear of the Greek mother. Here was a noble example. Woman's influence should be exerted for the right. Yes, she can do much. In ancient times we know they gave up their jewels, and their hair, even, for their country. Yes,

"Woman, God bless her,
She's an angel on the earth;
As pure and good as angels are—
To see her is to love her."

The time will soon come when the benign star of peace will again shine forth, when all shall go, as Byron well said, as

"Merry as a marriage bell."

Let us take the Constitution. I have traveled by night and by day for its vindication. Let us take it for the ark of our safety, as the palladium of our liberty. Let us stand by it, and join in one fraternal band, and lay it on the altar of our country, and with animated

IMPORTANT FROM THE MISSISSIPPI.

Reported Capture of Yazoo City and Destruction of the Rebel Fleet.

Probable Attack on Haines' Bluff from Above and Below.

An Important Rumor Through Gen. Rosecrans.

VICKSBURGH SAID TO BE EVACUATED

REPORTS RECEIVED IN CINCINNATI.

CINCINNATI, Saturday, March 14.

The Gazette has a Memphis dispatch which says that a report was in circulation that Admiral Porter had received information that the Yazoo Pass expedition had captured Yazoo City, and destroyed the rebel fleet.

Another special from Memphis says that Admiral Porter is momentarily expecting intelligence from Haines' Bluff, announcing the arrival of our forces there, which would be the signal for a combined attack upon that fortification.

REPORTS RECEIVED IN CHICAGO.

CHICAGO, Saturday, March 14.

A special Memphis dispatch, of the 11th, says that Gen. QUINBY's Division, which was forced to return from Young's Point on account of high water, stopped at Yazoo Pass, and has probably gone to reinforce that expedition, which is said to have passed Yazoo City and captured the fleet of rebel transports that have rendezvoused there for a long time.

REPORTED EVACUATION OF VICKSBURGH.

WASHINGTON, Saturday, March 14.

A telegram from Gen. ROSECRANS states that, according to a report which had reached him, the rebels had evacuated Vicksburgh. Information had previously been received here that they were removing their stores and war materials from Vicksburgh into the interior. Nothing however is officially known to be to speak with certainty.

LATER AND IMPORTANT.

Movement of Troops Against the Rebel Stronghold.

A CAPITULATION EXPECTED.

CAIRO, Saturday, March 14.

Advices from Memphis are received to Thursday evening.

An important movement of troops is taking place below.

Look out for important results soon.

Yazoo pass is likely to prove an advantage not heretofore appreciated.

Officers just from Vicksburgh say the stronghold must soon capitulate or do worse.

THE YAZOO PASS EXPEDITION.

INTERESTING REPORT OF ITS PROGRESS.

Correspondence of the Detroit Free Press.

COLDWATER RIVER, Miss., Sunday, March 1, via CAIRO, Tuesday, March 10, 1863.

The expedition left Moon Lake on Wednesday morning, reaching the end of the Pass yesterday noon, 12 miles in three days and a half. The boats are much broken in the light upper works, but not one is damaged in the hull or machinery. The most difficult portion of the trip is overcome. This will be memorable as the greatest achievement of the war. Any one who had seen the Pass before the expedition entered it, could never have supposed a fleet of steamers could possibly pass through it.

Soldiers and steamers are occupied at every turn in cutting down the trees, clearing away rafts of driftwood, and otherwise making a channel. The water is very deep, with a swift current, and the course terribly crooked, causing great liability of the boats being dashed to pieces against the trees at every turn, but all is safe now. We move forward again to-morrow morning.

A battery is reported at the mouth of the Coldwater, twelve miles from here, and everybody is anxious to see it.

The health of the expedition is excellent, and all are in fine spirits and confident. We get all manner of reports of rebel preparations to receive us, but they are only the cause of laughter.

Lieut. Commander SMITH and Gen. ROSS are making arrangements to keep communication open with the rear. Lieut. SMITH promises to patrol the streams with gunboats as high up as the Pass and as low down as we go. If the army will furnish transports to run between us and Helena, the arrangements will probably be made.

COLD WATER RIVER, Miss., Thursday, March 5, Via CAIRO, Tuesday, March 10.

The expedition has advanced twenty miles since the last report. The country is entirely destitute of population. Nothing of the slightest importance has occurred with us yet. We receive nothing in the way of news, either from the front or rear. We hope to reach Tallahatchie to-morrow, when we shall begin to make better progress. The rams Lioness and Fulton have joined us.

The indications are that the enemy have filled the river with timber, mostly sycamore, which, sinking, only obstructs the bottom of the channel. The great rise in the river, caused by cutting the Mississippi levee, enables the lighter boats to pass over these obstructions without the slightest trouble.

THE WAR IN TENNESSEE.

Gen. Rosecrans' Army in Splendid Condition.

CINCINNATI, Saturday, March 14.

Private advices have been received from Gen. ROSECRANS' army, which give the most gratifying accounts of its condition. The men and officers are in high spirits, confident and cheerful. They are well clothed, well fed, splendidly armed, and have comfortable quarters. Foraging parties have been exceedingly successful.

GEN. ROSECRANS' ACTIVITY.

Correspondence of the Chicago Tribune.

NASHVILLE, Saturday, March 7, 1863.

I have just reached this city, en route from Murfreesboro to Franklin, the scene of the disgraceful affair of Thursday.

For a week past the vicinity of Murfreesboro has been well scoured by our forage trains, and, as I told you in my last, hardly a day passed but that forage-train escorts had skirmishes with the enemy. The expeditions, however, about whose exploits you have had for several days past cautious telegraphic reports, are of a different character.

They have been evidently set on foot for the purpose of feeling the strength and fathoming the designs of the enemy, who hovers upon our front. RAINCROFT, as you will have been told by telegraph before this reaches you, moved on Thursday toward McMinnville. His whole division, of which the One Hundred and Twenty-third and Eightieth Illinois, the One Hundred and First, Seventeenth, Seventy-second, Seventy-fifth and Ninety-eighth Indiana Regiments, and the Tenth and Nineteenth Indiana battaries form a part, were of the expedition.

HAZEN's brigade, of PALMER's division, which for a fortnight has been stationed at Readyville, are co-operating, and the probabilities are that before this letter is in print, the telegraph will have informed you of the capture or dispersal of the rebel camp at Woodbury.

Another expedition went southward yesterday, and as the telegram last night informed you, the result of it was the occupation of Middletown, a small village on the old Nashville stage road, some three miles to the right of Shelbyville Pike, and about twelve miles south of Murfreesboro. The rebels gave quite a fight before yielding possession of the place, losing a good number killed and wounded. We had none killed and but few wounded. At the time of my leaving, Murfreesboro this morning, details of the affair had not been received, and I am consequently unable to give the number of the wounded.

Still another expedition, the movement of which I [illegible]

FROM THE ARMY OF THE POTOMAC.

Much Ado About Nothing—Health of the Troops—The Provost Department, &c.

From Our Own Correspondent.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC, Wednesday, March 11, 1863.

As welcome as the cool mountain stream gurgling forth from its pebbly bed to the thirsty traveler on a Summer's day, is an item of interesting news to the unfortunate army correspondent, whom chance or choice has stationed in these parts just at this time. And if, in the course of events, anything should happen, I might instinctively be startled out of my self-possession by thoughts of what that energetic and accomplished officer, Gen. PATRICK, the Provost-Marshal, would do if his penetrating eye happened to discover the fact recorded. So that if perchance, some one more fortunate than the rest of the profession should forward, "exclusively," any startling intelligence, let me now forestall hasty judgment of censure by asking that the seeming neglect be placed to the credit of the Provost-Marshal. Gen. PATRICK, with whom some find fault for leniency toward Secesh families, is nevertheless a faithful, conscientious officer. No one ever heard of favoritism being shown in that department since he has had the control of it. While the recent orders have greatly enlarged the duties of the Provost-Marshal, still the same quiet clock-work system prevails. The office is always full, but there is neither hurry nor bustle; the highest and lowest are all treated with due respect, and all are made to understand their status before leaving, so that if an order is disobeyed it must be done intentionally. Under the new régime even the Secesh across the river, with whom there is but little communication, begin to feel that order at last reigns in Warsaw. Large as the number is, there is not a citizen within the lines of the army to-day, whose ostensible business—and generally his real business—is not known at headquarters. More than this, there is not a leakage in our lines (for lines leak sometimes, as well as whisky barrels and correspondents,) but what is being carefully looked after. No better evidence need be produced of the change in the affairs in this department, than the effect upon a single Congressman. He had received permission at Washington to visit a certain camp for a special purpose; while there he expressed a wish to go further, if it were possible. "Why do you not go?" said a friend. "Ah!" says the Congressman, "(the times have changed, and I am glad of it; my pass expires to-day, and by the order of yesterday, no citizen is permitted within the lines without a pass from the Provost-Marshal General."

I was writing something about correspondents before this digression. Some individual of great perspicuity has said that a lawyer who acted as his own counsel had a fool for a client. Perhaps some other man may say as much of ye correspondent. I shall not attempt to show the conclusion as illogical one. But writing of correspondents reminds me that nearly all of these ubiquitous fellows have left these parts for a more congenial clime, having in more senses than one—to me a homely but expressive phrase—most officially played the place out. In rumaging for subjects of interest to the general reader at home, they have unwittingly made the sacred mud of Virginia historical—as well as the army and all its surroundings. Even the good deeds of the Commanding General and the heroic conduct of the troops under the most demoralizing circumstances, have been reiterated so often, that—satisfactory as the facts are—the task has almost become a bore. But the dead animals, the prevailing stench, I presume will continue to be commented upon by regular correspondents until something transpires to change the position of affairs; while tenderfoots will again skin over and elaborate, as may suit their time or purpose the thread-bare subjects about camp.

There is a matter to which I shall venture here to call attention—that is, the sanitary condition of the camp. This subject is of special importance, and it is one in which all feel an interest. The health of the troops, it is conceded by all, to be remarkably good, all things considered. The only "epidemic" disease prevailing is a mild type of intermittent fever, which yields readily under the usual treatment. Of infectious diseases there is at present nothing to excite apprehension; but what there may be, should this army remain here until the sun begins to throw its vernal rays upon the decaying vegetable and animal matter that is scattered broadcast everywhere, is quite another affair.

The bulk of the Army of the Potomac has been forced to remain for several months in the County of Stafford. The historical Plague never swept a country more thoroughly of its inhabitants, or the locusts of old of all that there was pertaining to the vegetable kingdom. Under the best sanitary regulations, surrounded as it is by feculent pools and fetid air, a large camp, in the Spring of the year, cannot be otherwise than unhealthy. The vegetable and animal debris about this camp is a sight to behold, and beyond the conception of any person whose attention has not specially been directed to it. The whole voting population of New-York City, if located in Queen's County for four months, with the addition of 50,000 horses, would not be an exaggerated comparison of what Stafford County, Va., is to-day. A hot sun for one week would send up such lamentations from among the people as has not been heard since the unfortunate Peninsula campaign of 1862. But it is to be hoped that the army will be a long way from this benign warm weather sets in. In the meantime, all that science can do, or human skill or ingenuity suggest, will be done. The work of cleaning the Augean stables has already in fact been commenced. P.

REPORT ON OUR WESTERN IRON-CLADS.

The following is a report, submitted on the 9th inst., about the condition of our Western iron-clads: The Osage will be ready in three weeks, at St. Louis. Her turret is on board. The Neosho will be finished in five weeks. Her turret is ready, although not on board. These ships are swift, draw little water, and have two guns in their turrets. They are built of iron, and in compartments. The four larger vessels, Winnebago, Chickasaw, Kickapoo and Mahasatoc, cannot be ready before June. They are all alike, have one turret and two guns, but are much higher out of the water than the others, and are calculated for ocean duty if necessary.

The seven gigantic Niagara (table-ship) will be reported ready for service in a few weeks. She has [illegible]

Extensive Fire in First-avenue.

$100,000 WORTH OF PROPERTY BURNED UP—TOTAL DESTRUCTION OF MITCHELL & CO.'S STEARINE CANDLE FACTORY.

About 8 o'clock last evening, a fire originated in the stearine candle factory of R. T. MITCHELL & Co., Nos. 61, 63 and 65 First-avenue. The factory extended 75 feet on the avenue, and 100 feet on Fourth-street. The building was soon in a mass of flames, the light of which was discernible for miles. The factory was entirely destroyed, causing a damage of $50,000 on stock, $3,000 on the machinery, and $15,000 on the building. Premises No. 67 First-avenue, occupied by SAMUEL ISAACS, took fire, as did also a slaughter-house on the rear. Damage on building $200, on stock $500, and on the slaughter-house $500. Insured fully in the Fulton Insurance Company. Building No. 69 was also damaged about $100. The fire originated from a crack in the "digester," in the candle factory, caused by a leak in the boiler. FREDERICK PETTCHARDER, the private watchman, was so badly burned about the arms and hands that he will be obliged to have them both amputated. The tenement houses opposite the fire were the scene of the wildest confusion, as the inmates supposed they would be burned out. For the first time in six years a general alarm was rung; but this was through a mistake, no order to that effect having been given either by Chief Engineer DECHAN or any of his Assistants.

While this fire was in progress another alarm was given from No. 82 First-avenue, and apprehensions were felt of a general conflagration. This fire, however, was quickly put out. The entire loss is supposed to be upward of $100,000, and it was not until this morning that the flames were entirely subdued.

STABBING AFFRAY IN THE FOURTH WARD.—A man named THOMAS NOONIS was badly stabbed at a late hour last night, by a man named GAYON, a notorious character in the Fourth Ward. The affray occurred in the saloon of JOHN MEEHAN, No. 62 Cherry-street. There was no dispute between the parties, GAYON making the assault without provocation. NOONIS was cut in the throat and about the head and face. His right eye also was completely cut out. GAYON was arrested by Officer WALKER and locked up in the Fourth Ward Station-house.
